Owney is the name of a Scotch terrier belonging to the postmaster at Albany, N. Y. The dog is about 17 years of age, has made one circuit of the United States and is now on his second tour. He landed in Omaha yesterday and some of the boys at the postoffice added a tag labeled "Omaha Postoffice" to the many that are now on his collar.

James W. Hamilton, colored preacher and convicted of wife murder, was electrocuted in the prison at Sing Sing Monday at 11 o'clock. The crime for which he suffered the penalty was the premeditated murder at Winfield, Long Island, in May, 1892, of Annie Brooks, a pretty colored girl whom he betrayed and was forced to marry three years before. They did not live together, and Hamilton tried in vain to secure a divorce from her. He expressed a determination to get rid of her, decoyed her from Flushing, L. I., where she was employed, to Winfield, where he cut her throat. Death was instantaneous and unlike all former executions there was only one contact of the electrodes. There was no scorching or scalding of the skin or steaming at the electrodes, and produced the most successful results yet carried out.

This novel problem is now circulating among the newspapers seeking a solution: A freight train one mile in length stopped with a caboose just opposite the depot. The conductor got orders to move his train to the next station, which was just five miles distant. He gave the engineer orders to move, which the latter did, while the conductor walked over ahead on top of the cars and got there just as the engine arrived at the next station where he got off. The question is how far did he walk, or as he was walking the entire five miles, did he ride at all?

Director General Davis said last Sunday that the week had been very satisfactory as far as the receipts of exhibits were concerned. "We received more than during any previous week," he said, "and were informed that large shipments would arrive early this week. The exhibits have been put in place promptly, and I can say that our part of the work is not lagging. We look for a number of big shipments this week, and my department chiefs are ready to receive them. There is nothing to indicate now that all the exhibits will not be in place on May 1."

Miss Abbie Oliver, a beautiful young lady, of Sturgis, Union county Ky., was led astray eight months ago. Last Monday the mother of the girl entered the place of business of Henry Delaney, a drug clerk, accused of being responsible for the girl's condition, at the point of a pistol compelled him to enter a carriage with her husband and daughter. They drove fifteen miles to Morganfield, procured license and compelled him to marry the girl. On the way back the carriage was attacked by armed men on horseback. They were Delaney's friends, who fired into the carriage and followed it as it flew up the road. Delaney, having jumped out joined them. The girl was shot through the head and died this morning. She would soon have become a mother. Her father was also mortally wounded. Mrs. Oliver recognized her pursuers and warrants for their arrest were issued. All belong to prominent families and more bloodshed is expected.

At the Mercy of a Maniac.

One day the Duke of Wellington sat writing at his library table quite alone, his door was suddenly opened without a knock or announcement of any sort, and in stalked a gaunt man, who stood before the commander-in-chief with his hat on and a savage expression of countenance. The Duke was of course, a little annoyed at such an unceremonious interruption, and, looking up, he asked: "Who are you?" "I am Dionysius," was the singular answer. "Well what do you want?" "Your life," "My life." "Yes; I am sent to kill you." "Very odd," said the duke, sitting back and calmly gazing at the intruder. "Not at all, for I am Dionysius," said the stranger; and I must put you to death." "Are you obliged to perform this duty to-day?" asked the commander-in-chief. "I am very busy just now and have a large number of letters to write. It would be very inconvenient to day." The visitor looked hard during a moment's pause. "Call again," continued the duke, "or write, and make an appointment." "You'll be ready?" "Without fail," was the reply. The maniac awed, doubtless, by the stern old soldier, backed out of the room without further words, and half an hour later was safe in Bedlam—Argonaut.

We are indebted to the correspondent of the Times in Paris whose happy function it is to furnish artistic news about artistic toilettes to readers (of the correspondent's sex?), for authoritative information that the reign of crinoline is not yet. This cheerful intelligence comes from two very high sources, one the supreme French dressmaker of his time, and the other an Englishman of equally undoubted supremacy. As is characteristic of the respective races, perhaps, that the Englishman says that crinoline will not be used, and cites the decisive fact that "twelve"—note the proud exactness of this numeral, not a dozen, nor any vague expression of number, but precisely twelve—"royal personages" whom he has had the honor to wait upon for instructions as to their wardrobes have not mentioned crinoline. On the other hand, the Frenchman says with equal pride and authority, but of different kind, that crinoline shall not be used. He will not permit it. Has he not given his precious time and his invaluable talents gradually and firmly to lead the daughters of Eve to a style of wearing apparel which if not so simple as that of their great ancestress, shall at least not confuse and pervert the noble lines of inherited from her? And shall he now, in the hour of his triumph, when feminine charms to the remotest ends of the earth enjoy the aid and enchantment of his art, submit to see them subjected to this hideous and monstrous defilement called crinoline? Thousands of thunders and names of all mentionable things! Jamais! jamais! Both of which assurances we accept with profound relief. If royalty, inherited or earned, forbids crinoline, the common sense of our republican women may be left free to reject it. For the moment we breathe more easily.—Harpers Magazine.

The will of Mr. Jas. Walston who died last January, is being contested in the equity court by his relatives. Mr. Walston lived in Rock Bluffs and when stricken with paralysis he was cared for by a man and woman named Carroll. When he died he willed his property amounting to about $150,000 to Mrs. Carroll. The relatives claim that fraud was practiced upon the man in his feeble condition and are trying, therefore to break the will.
