FRANK DICKSON,
County Clerk.

After you have been everywhere else and got prices, come to us and we will sell you more goods for the money than any place in Cass county, and we guarantee goods as represented. Owing to dull times we have a larger stock of saddles than the trade demands, and have concluded to reduce the stock, if making prices will do it. You can get a better saddle now for the money than at any time in your life. You can get sweat-pads at about what the freight costs—Koefler & Schmidtmann.

ROCK BLUFFS, NEB.

Once more we have the pleasure of receiving THE HERALD. There are a great many copies of it distributed around Rock Bluffs.

The weather is so changeable that we can't get a fire half the time and the other half under a shade tree.

Potatoes that were planted on good Friday, are frozen in the ground.

The river is on the rise again.

P. S. Hall has cleared a big tract of land on the Spencer farm.

The Wolf boys have leased the Walter White timber land and are going to make a farm out of it.

J. L. Lewis has manufactured a new garden rake.

John Churchill keeps the anvil ringing a good deal.

Young & Berk are clearing new land for J. M. Young west of town.

Ben McCulloch is quite a dashing young man, and has a new buggy. He and Wm. Shea were very anxious to hear from the city election at Plattsmouth, so they hopped up and went to town. When they were started home they heard the horns blowing, and concluded they would blow their horns too. They did so, and the team became frightened and ran away, throwing them out. They got up bruised and bleeding and started to capture the team. Everything was all broken to pieces, and Ben went back to clear up the wreck. He is goodnatured about it, and tells the boys to come up and get a toothpick on him. But his best girl wears a long face when she thinks of the buggy being broken up.

NONE SUCH.

The Ideal Woman.

[By Lady Cook, the Tennessee Clarion.]

Wherever we look on the works of mediæval art, we see numberless conceptions of the Madonna and child. No two of them may be alike, yet they all portray the painter's ideal of pure maternity and joyous innocence. Mary may be a Dutch blonde, or an Italian brunette, or even a hard German housewife of the old school; but, plain or beautiful, she is always honest, clear-eyed, placid content. And the child the infant Hercules, of the Christian faith, he who must cleanse the Augean stables of the world, the wrestler the serpent strangler, the heir of infinite potentialities lies coying with the breast of his mother. How utterly human it all is! The bride of God is a Syrian peasant girl; the son of God, a helpless, naked infant. How supremely happy, too, she appears, as she gazes calmly down into the eyes of her boy! What joy is there like that of a mother? Joseph is not always present, and, when he is, it is only as a decent accessory. Helooks awkward. His office appears to have ceased. Usually, if not always, there is a look in his face expressive of deep thought, as one who would say, "This is the man-Christ who is born to redeem the race, and set a perfect example for all men and women to follow." Yet there seems to be a doubt in his mind as to the conception, the beginning, the great mystery. The artist never knows exactly how or where to pose him. The child, however, is an obvious necessity, but holds a secondary place. Mary is the centre. All eyes turn to her. On a thousand canvasses she stands on the saintly type of the glorified human mother. As the ages proceed our ideals must either advance or retrograde. There is no middle position. The Roman church removed the Gods for her saint, and substituted the Virgin for Bona Dea. But, as Paganism gave way to Christianity, so the mystical theology of nineteen centuries is rapidly vanishing under the firm light of modern scientific research. What is false will be abandoned. The time has come when the Virgin must be respected and revered for the great good which she accomplished by bringing the grand man-Christ into the world, and henceforth all mothers must look to her as offering the noblest possible example for them to follow and imitate, in order that they, too, may bring into the world pure and lovable children, worthy of being called the images of God.

There are in our country three million wives at least, and unless poverty has compelled, thousands of their children have never known their mother's breasts. Three million women, all vowed to the duties of maternity, and the greater number of them deficient in nourishment and its elementary requirements. And why? Because they have undergone no kind of preparatory training; because they are ignorant of themselves and of their duties; because too frequently, they were wedded from sordid motives and to unsuitable men; because when love should have entered as a God, he came as a beast. Hence, the untold wretchedness of their loveless lives, the daily miseries that destroy their homes; to say nothing of shameful adulteries, wide-spread prostitution, loathsome diseases, and early deaths. Our law courts reveal but a very small fraction of the existing social corruption. Could we see the whole at once, we should recoil with horror at the sight. Throughout all nature, reproduction as the highest functions are more or less subsidiary. Maternity is thus the supreme effort of the supreme organism, neither to be undertaken lightly or without forethought. Yet the mothers of our marriageable girls have rarely given their daughters any information as to sexual relations. Prudishness or false modesty restrains. Consequently, their knowledge, acquired by experience, often comes too late to prevent unhappy results. The same girls may not study physiology. They must not learn how they were produced, and how they are formed. They are thus a ready prey of all who can take advantage of their ignorance.

The period arrives when the girl, young, fair, innocent, but intensely ignorant of all she ought to know, is thrown by conventional marriage into the arms of a man who whose habits and thoughts have nothing in common with hers. Even a roue—and roue

SOME weeks ago the N. Y. Loran said that if a general election were held at that time, the democrat party would be overwhelped. Getting more light from recent municipal elections the country over, not to speak of the gubernatorial election in Rhode Island, the Herald now repeats its former prediction, and adds that "unless the wave is stayed before the coming congressional elections, which now seems exceedingly doubtful, it will carry in to the next house of representatives a large republican majority as sure as fate." While this testimony is not necessary to enhance republican confidence, it is agreeable to have the opposition put such good matter in evidence.

"Now," said the intrepid explorer after he had shown the grateful native the inside workings of the brass watch and had noted his astute wonder at the mysteries of mechanism. "I will let you have one of these for two tusks. Then you can be the envy of the whole tribe." The native gentleman yawned. "I traded a second-hand war-club for a bushel of those things when I was at the world's fair last summer," said he, "and there was not a one of them that ran for more than a week. Got any chavin' about your clothes?"

SUBSTITUTES SELL.

By virtue of an order of sale issued by W. H. Downing, clerk of the district court within and for Cass county, Nebraska, and to me directed, I will on the 15th day of May A. D. 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day at the south door of the court house in the city of Plattsmouth, in said county, and at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, the following real estate, to-wit: The south half of section eleven (11), and twine (12), in block thirty-six (36) in the city of Plattsmouth, Cass county, Nebraska, together with the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging or in any wise appertaining. The same being listed upon and taken as the property of James E. Riley, defendant, to satisfy a judgment of said court recovered by James J. Patterson, administrator of the estate of Amos Patterson, deceased.
