DeGroat is Still Here

The capture of DeGroat, whose right name is Joe Wolverton, reflects great credit on Sheriff Wheeler and his deputy, McBride, and only for an accident a different story might have to be told about his capture. It seems he was stopping at the Perkins house in this city for a week some days ago and that he left his revolver under his pillow. When he went to Mynard to work he wrote back to Mr. Guthman asking him to care for his revolver till he called for it which was done, but up to the present time he failed to call. He bluntly told the officers that if he had not left his revolver in town they could not take him alive. He was very ugly and tried to break away after he had been captured and manacled.

The reward of $500 will be divided between W. A. Swearingen, the M. P. agent at Mynard, and the sheriff, as it seems the former after receiving a picture of the criminal located him and sent for the sheriff to make the arrest. The reward has not been paid over yet but the requisition papers are here, and it is thought the man may be taken away on the 5:30 train if the sheriff of Clark county, Iowa, makes the officers here satisfied that the reward will be paid as agreed. Wolverton is certainly a desperate character, and why he should hang around here two years after the murder was committed is one of those strange things which go to show that the old adage of "murder will out" is true in most instances. The man is very ignorant and the letter he wrote to Mr. Guthman could be improved upon by many school children seven or eight years of age.

Desperadoes at Large.

The Omaha police had a sharp skirmish with two highwaymen yesterday, whose fearless actions and escape without injury, seems miraculous if the written reports are true. Van Haller and Geppner were the two outlaws, and they are supposed to be in this city now, or in this vicinity.

Omaha detectives are scattered over the town, and vigilant watch has been kept at the depots and railway yards, but so far the men have not been captured.

Sheriff Wheeler and Deputy Sheriff Melbride have both been assisting in the search for the desperadoes who are two of the worst ever located in Omaha.

An immense lot of stolen property was found at a barn near the rendezvous of the men and it is said they do not intend to be taken alive. The man who arrests them takes his life in his hands. The men will probably get down the river under cover of darkness to Missouri where they can hide more effectually.

Pioneer Gone

H. G. Babbington died this morning at 1 o'clock at his residence on Locust street, east of Fourth street. The old gentleman had been a resident of Plattsmouth for twenty-eight years, having come here in 1870. He was born at Weymouth, N. J., November 1, 1821. His wife, who preceded him to the better world ten years ago, was a sister of the late E. G. Dovey. Mr. Babbington was taken ill with pleurisy a few weeks ago from which he never fully recovered though the immediate cause of his death seemed to be heart failure. He complained in the evening of feeling suffocated and expressed the belief that he was going to die. He seemed so strong that his daughter, Mrs. Will White, with whom he lived, tried to pacify his fears, not thinking at that time death was really so near. He got but little worse until about 1 o'clock when he suddenly expired. The deceased was loved by all who knew him, he was kindly and pleasant with everybody and did not have an enemy in the world.

He leaves three grown children to mourn his death, they are Mrs. I. F. Connell of Lenox, Ia., Mrs. Will White and David Babbington of this city. The funeral will take place Thursday at 2 p. m. from the M. E. church.
