KAFFIR'S ANTIDOTE.

Which Made Serpent's Venom Harmless A road party, comprising the usual gang of from fifty to sixty Kaffirs, was employed, says a writer in the London Spectator, on the construction of a road in the Tuegla valley, Natal, about thirty or more years ago. In the course of their work they came upon a huge stone which it was necessary to remove, but beneath it was the home of a large black mamba, well known to the neighboring inhabitants as being old and, therefore, very venomous. The mamba is the most deadly of the South African snakes, and the superover that rock. He offered a bribe for "wow'd!" and sat down to "bema gwi" (take snuff). But a slim youth sauntered forward and, amid the jeers and protestations of the rest, declared himself equal to the task. He took from his neck what looked like a bit White presented a resolution, which of shriveled stick, chewed it, swalwas read by the clerk, accepting the lowed some of it, spat out the rest on chanting a song of defiance he advanced with great confidence and swagger to the bowlder. There he roused up the mamba, which, in great bite of the reptile had no effect upon him whatever. No bribe, not even that of a cow (better than any gold in the eves of a Kaffir) would induce the native to disclose the secret of his antidote, which, he said, had been handed down in his family for generations. The snake was a very long one, and ac known fact that certain of the Zulus have antidotes for the more deadly snake poisons, which they preserve as a secret within their own families.
