THE QUICK-FIRING CRAZE.

Fast Reaching the Point of Absolute Absurdity.

The Austrian press, including even the military journal Reichswehr, has been giving prominence to the alleged rifle, says the London Globe. This truly wonderful weapon will in the hands of a "trained soldier," emit no forty-five in one minute. Thus in an engagement which lasted several hours each soldier could loose off a cartload ous engagement. For a sampaign of invasion each soldier would require to be followed by a magazine; and a shell exploding in a company would produce as many devastating explosions as there were men. If, on the other hand, each soldier marched with, say, his own 200 than five minutes and be left without ment. Such considerations are, of course, extreme; but they show that A crusade has been started in Lon- the "reductio ad absurdum" of quickfiring rifles is easily reached. Even now the difficulty is to get enough ammunition to the firing line and to keep control of the fire. If rapidity of fire is much increased without some entirely new method of bringing up ammuing able to pour in a deadly hall of bullets for a minute or two will be dearly purchased at the cost of whole brigades perhaps being rendered "hors de combat" for want of ammunition at the beginning of a fight. What applies and the armies which have been in a hurry to arm themselves with so-called quick-firing artillery before the machinery was perfect or the ammunition problem solved may find themselves in a worse quandary than if they had retained their old weapons.

Bacteria as Scavengers.

Bacteria are of the utmost importance merely as scavengers. Certain kinds have the power of breaking down the complex compounds which make up the animal and plant tissues into their simple components. This process is known as decomposition or decay; and with a single exception (in the case of the hard, woody structure of Isome plants, the first part of the change is caused by moulds), is entirely caused by the activities of these same bacteria. Were it not for this most necessary removal of dead matter, the whole surface of the earth would become covered, in the course of time, with the remains of dead the county comptroller's office inviting plants and animals, undergoing hardly any change.
