

WRECK IN THE YARDS.

No. 6, the Fast Denver Train, Crashes Into a Freight.

No one is injured, but the passengers receive a bad shaking up. The tender on the freight engine demolished. Engine on No. 6 only slightly damaged.

There was a small wreck in the north end of the Burlington yards a short time before 8:30 this morning, being a head-end collision between passenger train No. 6, east bound, and freight No. 29, going north.

The passenger train's time to pull into the yards is 8:21, while the time for the freight to leave is 7:44, but it seldom leaves on time. As usual it was late in getting ready to pull out this morning. The train was a heavy one and was standing on a siding on the west side of the main track. Just about the time No. 6 is due to pull into the yards the work of making up the train was finished and the engineer started to pull out, but had only proceeded far enough to reach the line upon which No. 6 was on when the heavy passenger train rounded the curve and crashed into the freight engine. The engine attached to No. 29 was "pony" No. 67, and was very badly wrecked. The tender and tank were broken loose from the other part of the machine and it was badly wrecked. The engine on No. 6 was number 325 and was one of the large "hogs," but it was not damaged to any great extent. Engineer Joe McCoy and Conductor Berry were in charge of No. 6, and the engineer on the freight was named Watts. Iv. Holmes was the fireman on the freight, and the two escaped injury by jumping.

Had the freight train been moving fast the wreck would have been a disastrous one, with great loss of life. There were a large number of passengers on board and a number were eating breakfast in the dining car—one or two of whom were somewhat bruised. All of the glass and chinaware was broken and one portep made his escape through the window. The ladies were badly frightened.

The blame seems to rest on the engineer and conductor of the freight as they pulled out without orders.

The passenger train was run into the Junction with two switch engines where another engine was attached, and the train was only delayed about thirty minutes on account of the mishap.

Before the rear brakeman on No. 6, after the collision was ordered back with a flag, and when the train was pulled out he was left at his post—not being recalled. As his run was only to the Junction he didn't miss his ride very much.

A Floater Found.

Late yesterday afternoon, Reuben Miles, a farmer residing near Rock Bluffs, came to town, hunted up Coroner Sattler and gave him an account of having found the body of a man half buried in the sand at the side of a bar out in the river. He said that the body had evidently lain there for quite a while, as the flesh had fallen from the man's face, and the body was much decayed. The man's clothes were intact, however, and he noticed that there was something in one of the pantaloons pockets, but he did not disturb it—preferring to let the body be as he found it until the coroner came.

The coroner, accompanied by B. L. Kirkham and Rush Fellows, went down there this morning, expecting to hold an inquest over the matter. Up to the time of going to press the party had not returned.

Body Not Identified.

Coroner Sattler returned from Rock Bluffs last evening, having summoned a jury and held an inquest over the body found in the river near there, mention of which was made in last evening's NEWS. The body had evidently been in the water—or rather mud—since the high water in the early summer, as it was something near seventy-five yards away from where water had been since that time. There was nothing found on the body except a bunch of keys and a one cent piece, the latter being wrapped in a piece of paper. The keys were attached to a small chain and one belonged to a double pad lock, and this is the only thing with which the man could ever be identified, as it is of peculiar shape and had been broken and fastened together again.

The jury returned a verdict to the effect that they were unable to determine how the man came to his death. The remains were buried in the cemetery near Rock Bluffs.

Stoltz Sage.

At the Christian church at 8 o'clock last evening Leroy Stoltz and Miss Gertrude Sage were united in marriage by Rev. J. T. Baird of the Presbyterian church. The ceremony was witnessed by the relatives and immediate friends of the young couple. After the ceremony a number of invited guests went with the newly married couple to the home of the bride in the west part of town, where an elegant supper was served.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Sage and the groom is the son of Allen Stoltz and wife, and is associated with his father in the painting business.

The young people have a large number of friends in the city with whom THE NEWS joins in wishing them unbounded success through life.

THE FAMOUS GRANTZ MINE.

It Continues to Give Up An Abundance of Its Hidden Treasures.

This writer had the pleasure yesterday of witnessing the taking out of the ground of large slabs of almost pure gold at the Grantz mine, of which so much notoriety has been given throughout the breadth of the land, says the Pioneer-Times of Sunday morning. Layers about one-fourth to one-half an inch in thickness and as large as a boy's hand, were found lying upon an iron ore in a water crevice and free from surrounding rock. They will weigh from one-half to three-fourths of a pound apiece and Mr. Grantz has several hundred dollars' worth of these, which are not taken out of the rock, but found in elabs between the layers of rock, as if the gold had been melted and poured into the crevice by human hands. Friday, Mr. Grantz put a force of several men at work cleaning up and yesterday commenced taking out ore preparatory to loading and shipping another car. The fabulously rich ore which was at first found continues to hold out as good, if not better, than at first, and any rock broken from the body shows a great amount of free gold, some being fine, but very thickly distributed through the rock, while other pieces contain large nuggets of gold, which will sometimes hold two pieces of the ore together by a golden thread. The slabs taken out yesterday are gold and silver combined, estimated to be about one-third silver and the balance pure gold, and is one of the most wonderful strikes that has ever been known.

The mine, or open cut, has been uncovered quite a distance along the body, and instead of the rich ore playing out, as had been rumored after Mr. Grantz had shut down the workings for a time while he was away with his first car of ore for treatment, the body continues and is getting thicker, and if anything, richer, as work progresses. Mr. Grantz had expected to close down workings for the winter after he had taken out another car, but is uncertain a present just what he will do regarding the workings. But there is one thing certain in the rich body continues, and it is not known what amount of wealth is awaiting the miners' coming with the limits of this wonderful strike.

The Shepherd-Benton Nuptials.

Miss Alice Louise Benton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Benton, was married to Arthur F. Shepherd of Plattsmouth at the Second Presbyterian church in this city last evening at 8 o'clock. Rev. Dr. Long officiated. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The bride was dressed in white silk and wore bride-crowns in her hair. Miss Helen Tuttle acted as bridesmaid and Leo Copeland was the groom's best man. Edward Robinson, chief usher, was assisted by Arthur Beckman and Ed Schulhof and F. R. Halacek of Plattsmouth. The ring ceremony was used. The wedding was attended by a large party of friends.

After the ceremony at the church a reception was given at the home of the bride's parents. The bride was the recipient of many costly and beautiful presents.

Mrs. Shepherd has lived in Lincoln for the past eleven years and is well known in a large circle of the city's society. The groom is an employe of the Burlington railroad and lives at Plattsmouth. Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd will be at home to their friends at Plattsmouth after November 15—State Journal.

The Lyman Twins.

No team of comedians have been more successful or come to the front rank in the theatrical world in a shorter space of time than the Lyman Twins. Their neat, refined work and clever singing and dancing specialties has won them favor and made them popular wherever they have appeared. This season they have outdone all former efforts and their new comedy, "A Merry Chase," has been one of the biggest artistic and financial successes of the year. They are supported by a capable company and carry elegant special scenery. They appear at White's opera house next Saturday evening.

The elder stated that he thought they were going to devour him the last few days.

THE OLD TORY.

He Had "A System" That Was Absolutely Infallible.

Walking down the Strand the other day I was attracted by a crowd that was collected round an omnibus. It was the usual scene—a prostrate horse, with the conductor sitting on its head and an officious policeman jolting down voluminous notes, says Answers. I was about to pass on when the face of the driver attracted my attention. "By Jove! that man is uncommonly like ———, a friend of my undergraduate days at Oxford," I said to myself, and as he at that moment took off his hat my impression was confirmed beyond a doubt. What a reverse of fortune! Five years ago he was quite the richest undergraduate at Oxford, for, besides a very liberal allowance from his parents, he won large sums on the turf. The persistence and regularity with which he won was very marvelous, and he accounted for it by saying that he gambled on an infallible system, which he would not divulge. His unvarying success produced a belief in us young spirits that he had successfully solved the problem which had been the ruin of so many people. The last time I saw him he was driving his own coach; five years later I met him driving an omnibus. It was a sad sight, and I passed on for fear of his recognizing me. I suppose the sequel is plain enough. The old story. Luck changed, and, like all gamblers, he drifted on to his beam-ends trying to retrieve his reverses.

ONE-ARMED WOMAN.

Plays the Role of a Pretty, Clever, Vivacious Thief.

Somerville (N. J.) Special to the New York Sun: Never since old Farmer Pendergast was gold-bricked out of $5,000 has the Watchung Ridge section been visited by as clever an impostor as recently let herself loose among the hills. She was young and vivacious, with a pretty oval face and dark eyes, topped with a wealth of bleached hair. Her form was slender and graceful, and she walked with a jaunty air. She wore a tailor-made gown, a stylish hat and a fur cape, all of the best material. The most striking thing about her appearance was the absence of her left arm, which was off at the shoulder. One stormy night she knocked at the door of Garret C. Brokaw, a well-to-do farmer living on the ridge near White House. She gave her name as Miss Leona Deminor of New York City, and said she had got off the cars at the wrong station and had lost her way. Her destination was Flemington, sixteen miles away, and she wanted shelter for the night. The sight of this pretty miss in the storm appealed to Farmer Brokaw, and he gladly gave her shelter. Her manner was that of a woman of culture and refinement. She said she had lost her arm in a wreck on the Philadelphia & Reading railroad near Trenton later, and had got a verdict for $25,000 damages against the company, and that the settlement was about to be made at Flemington by her lawyer, O. P. Chamberlain, of that place, and the agents of the company.

The Brokaw family were charmed with the stranger, and invited her to remain at least a week. She protested, and accepted the invitation. On the day allowed to have been set for the settlement of her claim Brokaw, with his best span of horses, drove the fair stranger sixteen miles to Flemington. She alighted from his carriage in front of the county clerk's office, where she said she was to meet by appointment her lawyer and the agents. Brokaw saw her enter the building, and drove to Humphrey's hotel, where he was to dine with her an hour later. He waited in vain. Hours later he searched the town for her and inquired at every railroad station, but could get no trace of her. At the office of O. P. Chamberlain he learned that he had been duped, as the lawyer was without knowledge of the fair damsel. Brokaw then whipped his horses into a run and started for home. After taking an inventory of the family cash and valuables he told his wife not to harbor another strange woman, even if she had both arms off. Mrs. Brokaw retorted that the stranger would never have been harbored at all if Mr. Brokaw had not been so taken with her. Brokaw's loss is believed to be heavy, but he refuses to talk about it, as he has recently been laughing at a neighbor who was gold-bricked. Information has been received here recently of the arrest of a woman giving her name as Miss Giberson and answering the description of the swindler at Westchester, Pa. She is held by Chief of Police Jeffries of that place, charged with stealing jewelry from people at Bristol and Wilmington, whose confidence she gained through a story about her lost arm, a railroad wreck and a verdict of $40,000 against the Pennsylvania railroad yet to be collected.

HARDWOOD SAWDUST.

The Fine Dusts Used for Various Special Purposes.

The fine sawdust of hard woods, that which is produced in sawing veneers, is used for a variety of special purposes; fine mahogany sawdust, for instance, being extensively used in cleaning furs. There are sold 15 or 20 different varieties of fine sawdust from as many different kinds of hard woods, these being gathered from the various mills. While the mahogany is the sawdust most largely used in cleaning furs, various other kinds are also employed for that purpose. The use of boxwood sawdust for cleaning jewelry is traditional. Boxwood sawdust is also used for polishing silver. Some sawdusts are used in marquetry work. Some are used in making pressed moldings and ornaments. Sandalwood sawdust is used in scent bags. The production of coarse sawdust of various hard woods, such as oak and maple, is greater than the demand for them; such sawdusts may be burned in the mills where they are produced. Coarse mahogany sawdust may be sold for commonplace uses, or employed as fuel where it is made; but for the fine sawdust of all the hard woods there is more or less demand; for many of them there is a ready market. The most costly of fine hard wood sawdust is boxwood, of which the supply is less than the demand. Fine hard wood sawdusts are shipped from New York to various parts of the United States; they are exported in considerable quantities to Canada, and some are sent to England.

Manuscript of the Book of Mormon.

In a bank vault in the little town of Richmond, Mo., says the Chicago Tribune, is kept the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, in the handwriting of Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery and the others to whom Smith dictated what he claimed was a translation from the golden plates found by him buried in the hill Cumorah, near Palmyra, N. Y. After the book was printed the manuscript was turned over to David Whitmer, who took it to Independence, Mo., and later to Richmond, Mo., where he died in 1888. Before his death, the leader of the Mormon church made many efforts to get possession of the manuscript, at one time offering $100,000 in cash for it. Whitmer was a poor man, but he refused the offer, because he feared an attempt would be made to incorporate into the book by forgery a defense of polygamy. George W. Swetch of Richmond is the present possessor of the manuscript, and within the last two weeks representatives of the Mormon church from Utah have renewed negotiations for the purchase of the manuscript of the book.
