Hnother Visit of St. Nicholas.

'Twas the day before Christmas, and all through the school The pupils were restless and broke every rule; A spirit of mischief pervaded the air, And the master at last stamped his foot in despair. He thumped on his desk, and he said "Girls and boys, Come to order at once. I won't have so much noise! Attend to your lessons, and understand clearly, The next one who speaks will be punished severely."

Appalled by his threat, for a time no one spoke, Until, with a chuckle suppressed to a choke, "Please, sir," said the voice of the tiniest scholar, "Tomorrow is Christmas, and I've got to holler!" The pupils looked scared and the master looked black, He glanced at the birch-rod that hung at his back, But as he arose and was turning around, Down the chimney St. Nicholas came with a bound.

He was dressed all in fur from his head to his foot, And his clothes were all covered with ashes and soot. "Merry Christmas, my children," he said, with a wink, Then he turned to the master, and-what do you think? He looked at him queerly. "My dear sir," he said, "You may go to your home, and I'll stay here instead. Take your coat from the peg and your hat from the shelf-The rest of today I will teach school myself."

The master departed St Nicholas took His seat at the desk and he opened a book. "Hoot, toot!" he exclaimed. "What nonsense is this? I'll teach you some lessons worth learning, I wish, And nothing today in this school may be taught, But shall with the spirit of Christmas be fraught. Put away all your books and just listen to me." The children right gladly obeyed his decree, And attentively sat, while St Nicolas' lore Made attractive the studies so stupid of yore.

The botany class he found easy to please By a simple analysis of Christmas trees; Their species and habits, their culture and use, And the relative merits of hemlock and spruce Of the red holly-berry and white mistletoe He gave a description and told how they grow.

His history class learned that once on a time. Long, long years ago, in a far distant clime. There dawned on this earth the first Christmas day; And this class was well pleased to discover t 1: th Had no longer difficult string of dates to remember, They need learn only one-the 25th of December.

The astronomyclass was told of a star That appeared long years since, in a country afar, Then St. Nicholas said, "Children, dear, if you please, We'll sing some earols, catches and glees.' The geography class then this queer teacher told Of his far-away home at the North Pole so ccc. He described it, and then the obliging old chap Turned 'round to the blackboard and drew them a map To show them the route which he travels each year, With his miniature sleigh and eight tiny reindeer.

The classes in science were then taught to know The wonderful value of ice, frost and snow; And St. Nicholas chuckled, while wisely dilatic Of the process of snowballing, coasting or skal The geometry class were sent to the board, And by diagrams made with a crayon and cor Were taught to inscribe with an accurate of Component triangles in a circle of pie.

A lecture on natural history then The teacher announced, as he laid down And the pupils all listened, delighted Descriptions and tales of the nob'e re O-nithology followed, in well-chosen words, Which made clear to them all that the principal birds-The handsomest birds, and the birds of most use. Without doubt are the turkey, the duck and the roose.

Physiology next, and the children learned why It is best not to eat too much candy or pie. Last of all came the class in industrial arts, And by numerous diagrams, sketches and charts St. Nick to the children who around him were flocking, Demonstrated the best way to hang up a stocking

"Now lessons are over," St. Nicholas said, "Skurry home, eat your suppers and hop into bed, "For, until you are all wrapped in slumber profound, "I cannot start on my annual round ?

He sprang to his sleigh and he reached for his whip; The children ran home with a nop and a skip, But they heard him exc aim, ere he drove out of sight, "Merry Christmas to all! I will drop in tonight."
