The British artillery was unable to cope with the superior long-range Boer guns. During the afternoon it tecame evident that the infantry could not endure another day. It was impossible to drag guns to the summit without elaborate preparations or fortify the hill enough to protect the defenders from unassailed artillery. Therefore Thorney-croft's decision to abandon the hill was both wise and necessary. The troops were still subborn and formidable. They marched back to the camps in regular order. Every effort is now being made to succor the wounded, of the succor the wounded the whom many are still lying on the summit. Official lists will give the lose. Big Battles and Rain.

It is a curious fact-well known, however, to weather experts-that heavy firing will generally cause rain, even though the sky was clear beforehand. At Waterloo rain came down in torrents. So it did in several of the big battles of the American civil war-Gettysburg, for example. The tremendous concussion shakes the little globules of water which are always present invisibly in the atmosphere together, and so brings them down.
