A fisherman named Jack Elliott noticed the body of an unknown man floating down stream near the Missouri river bridge at an early hour this morning. He quickly secured a skiff and succeeded in towing the body ashore about a half mile below the bridge.

Coroner Gass was notified and he empanneled the following named gentlemen to serve as a jury: William Edgerton, R. O. Fellows, F. M. Richey, W. D. Jones, A. B. Taylor and A. B. Todd. They viewed the body and thirty-five years old; five feet eight their teams on the street should bear inches in height; heavy build; brown this fact in mind, and thus guard hair; sandy mustache; dark panta- against possible disastrous accidents. loons with light stripes; body of shirt ets were found two desk keys, $1.05 in been engaged to play at the demomoney and a large blue handkerchief with white circles around the margin. However, no papers were found on his person which would throw any light upon the mystery as to his identity. He had been in the water perhaps about four days. After the investigation was finished it was decided to adjourn until 1 o'clock and conclude the inquest at the office of the coroner. step being decided upon in view of the fact that the weather was too hot to keep the remains any length of time.

The verdict of the jury was to the effect that the man, to the jury unknown, had come to his death in the Missouri river at some place to the jury unknown. No marks of violence could be found on the body, and for this reason it was decided that his death had been accidental.

Baffled the Officer.

Detective James Malone, who has been on the trail of the Bradshaw train robber and the latter's accomplices ever since the robbery occurred, has returned to Lincoln without his of their son's death. From the informen. The bloodhounds lost the trail of the criminals-caused, perhaps, by doubt that the report is correct. the fact that the fugitives changed teams. After following the scent of a team of horses for many miles, the dogs would suddenly come upon a day. change of trail at some little town where the robbers had changed for a team of mules, which would naturally have a tendency to spoil their work for a time, as they would still be hunting for the old trail. This difficulty was overcome to some extent by carrying the animals a short distance along the new track, where no trace of the visit until after the Fourth. old one remained to confuse them.

It is generally agreed by railroad authorities that this chase has been an example of the finest work in that line. The fact that the dogs were compelled to follow a trail for more than a hundred miles under such adverse conditions is certainly a praiseworthy feat. Everything possible has been done and the fugitives have certainly had a run for their lives.

It is thought the men who committed the crime are residents of Oklahoma or Indian Territory, as they are heading in that direction.
