Got the Letters Mixed.
A young American, who is particular about his washing, the other day wrote a note to his laundress and one to his sweetheart, and, by a strange fatality, put the wrong address on each envelope and sent them off. The washwoman was delighted at an invitation to take a ride the next day, but when the young lady read, "If you tumble up my shirt bosom any more as you did the last time, I will go somewhere else," she cried all the evening and declared she would never speak to him again.

Professor Munyon has just issued a most beautiful, useful and complete Almanac; it contains not only all the scientific information concerning the moon's phases, in all the latitudes, but has illustrated articles on how to read character by phrenology, palmistry and birth month. It also tells all about card reading, birth stones and their meaning, and gives the interpretation of dreams. It teaches beauty culture, manicuring, gives weights and measures, and antidotes for poison. In fact, it is a Magazine Almanac, that not only gives valuable information, but will afford much amusement for every member of the family, especially for parties and evening entertainments. Farmers and people in the rural districts will find this Almanac almost invaluable.

It will be sent to anyone absolutely free on application to the MUNYON REMEDY COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA.

Her Logic.

Anna Margaret had a great many toys, and her mother thought she ought to give some of them away before Christmas to less fortunate children. Anna Margaret was willing to part with the broken trunk and the cracked set of dishes and the one-legged Teddy bear, and a few other toys that were in the same dilapidated condition. But when it came to her pet baby doll, the one that went to sleep with her every night, she rebelled. Mother assured her that Santa Claus would undoubtedly bring her another doll, even better; but she refused to be comforted.

"Mother," she wailed, "if God sent Aunt Jessie another baby, would she give Baby Jean away?" She kept her doll.—Harper's Bazar.

The Penny Saved.

The Penny Saved was put in the bank, the old broken teapot having gone out of style. Here it presently overheard two voices talking.

"I want to borrow $50,000,000 to finance a candle trust!" said one voice.

"Glad to accommodate you!" said the other.

And the next Penny Saved knew, it was going out into the channels of trade.

When the man to whom it belonged fell into sore need (he was a candle-maker and the trust crushed him out) and came to the bank for his money, he was courteously informed that the institution had passed into the hands of a receiver and recommended to call again in a year or two and get his share of the assets, should there prove to be any.—Puck.

PRIZE FOOD

Palatable, Economical, Nourishing.

A Nebr. woman has outlined the prize food in a few words, and that from personal experience. She writes: "After our long experience with Grape-Nuts, I cannot say enough in its favor. We have used this food almost continually for seven years.

"We sometimes tried other advertised breakfast foods but we invariably returned to Grape-Nuts as the most palatable, economical and nourishing of all.

"When I quit tea and coffee and began to use Postum and Grape-Nuts I was a nervous wreck. I was so irritable I could not sleep nights, had no interest in life.

"After using Grape-Nuts a short time I began to improve and all these ailments have disappeared and now I am a well woman. My two children have been almost raised on Grape-Nuts, which they eat three times a day.

"They are pictures of health and have never had the least symptom of stomach trouble, even through the most severe siege of whooping cough they could retain Grape-Nuts when all else failed.

"Grape-Nuts food has saved doctor bills, and has been, therefore, a most economical food for us."

ENDS THE FORAKER WAR.

Senate Action on Bill Closes the Brownsville Incident.

Washington, Feb. 24.—The president is authorized to appoint a court of inquiry to determine the qualifications for re-employment of discharged soldiers of the Twenty-fifth infantry regiment who were accused of shooting up Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

The Aldrich bill for this purpose was passed by a party vote of 56 to 26, except that Senator Teller voted with the Republicans for the passage of the bill. The bill is a compromise measure approved by President Roosevelt, Senator Foraker and all of the Republican members of the committee on military affairs.

The court of inquiry will act as a board to consider applications for re-employment and recommend the restoration to duty of such soldiers who are not found guilty of complicity in the affray.

Sewing for the Tots

Two white coats, one of elderdown and one of cashmere, three styles of booties, a quilted house coat and a printed flannel or crape bathrobe, a long flannel petticoat, a short linen dress, three styles of sacques, and flannel night-drawers for the small folk.

FASHIONS for a baby may sound a bit far-fetched, yet fashions there are, just as surely as for grown ups. Of course there are not the whimsical vagaries of the Paris modes, but each year one finds preferences for certain styles and materials in baby clothes. One might call this a "corduroy" year, for that is the favorite material for coats for the wee ones. One of the best features of corduroy is that it launders beautifully. It comes in many lovely colors, and is particularly pretty in white. It would be difficult to imagine a sweeter or more cozy-looking coat and bonnet for a very small baby than one of white corduroy.

Snowy elderdown is another favorite material for the tiny one's winter coat. It is a very warm lightweight material. A coat of white elderdown is shown in the upper right-hand corner of the sketch. It is cut with the sleeves and body in one piece, kimono fashion.

These are the newest lines in a baby's coat, and they are very becoming. It does away with the little shoulder cape, which must be a great discomfort to the child, for the capes are always blowing up into his face on a windy day. In the coat illustrated, a dainty touch is given by little pink rosebuds embroidered on the front. They are done with a plain embroidery stitch, and as there are only a few of them, it would perhaps take only an hour or two to work them, and the result is well worth while.

The bonnet is of elderdown, with an embroidered bunch of wee pink rosebuds at each side.

The other sketch is a cape and hood for summer of white cashmere. It is buttonholed with silk and embroidered in the necker. The ties and bows on the hood are of baby blue satin ribbon, and there is a frill of lace inside the hood. If one could not put so much hand work on the cape, the same model is very attractive made of white challis, henrietta or cashmere, and bound on the edge with pink or blue ribbon, in place of the buttonholing. These capes are very pretty made of pale blue or sea-shell pink outing flannel, bound and tied with matching wash ribbon.

In all babies' clothes daintiness and simplicity are the keywords, though the tiny garments must first be absolutely comfortable.

It is almost impossible for women who have many household duties to attend to do all the baby's sewing by hand. Of course, it is preferable, for the little dainty fine things seem to require the most delicate of sewing. However, there are many little jackets and wrappers that it would be a waste of time for the busy mother to think of doing other than by machine, for they wear out quickly.

There has been a fancy of late to make the wee one's kimonos and dressing sacques of gay flowered materials, Japanese fashion. They are remarkably pretty, too, these flower and butterfly and bird-strewn garments. Such tiny little things to be so gay! The wrapper in the sketch is the very essence of spring. It is a creamy flannel, with apple blossoms in delicate pinks, gorgeous butterflies and brilliant birds scattered over it. The ribbons are a lovely rose pink. Every bit of this wrapper is made by machine. It is cut on kimono lines and flat seamed. The ribbon binding is first to be basted on, with the ribbons for fastening basted on where the stitching will pass over them and hold them in place.

The two little sacques in the lower part of the sketch are also machine made. One is of white outing flannel with a pink dot, and pink wash ribbon-binding and bows. The other is of white cashmere, with blue and white ribbon. The remaining jacket is of white flannel, with buttonholed edges and ribbons of pink. This is one of the best models for a jacket, as it opens out flat, all in one piece, thus making it very easy to launder. There are ribbons tied under the arm to hold the garment in place. For summer, this is an ideal model carried out in pique, with colored ribbon, and a little embroidery. The edges may be ribbon bound if there is no time for hand work, but every baby should boast two or three hand embroidered jackets for "best."

Though the outer garment may be made satisfactorily, even daintily, by machine, it is absolutely essential that the underclothing be hand-made. Machine-sewn seams are hard and ridgy, and make the wee one uncomfortable. All seams must be sewn as flat and smooth as possible.

The little white dresses are the prettiest things imaginable. Only very fine lace should be used, if any. If possible, real valenciennes or very fine white cluny is best. The most delicate hand embroidery is very charming—veritable fairy tracery. Of course, this is not practical for the average woman, but the little frock may be fine and pretty, though perfectly plain. A baby is the daintiest, cleanest thing in the world, and one would no more think of putting a hard, coarse cotton dress on it than one would think of putting a bunch of American Beauty roses in a wooden scrubbing pail.

The little gowns should be made of nainsook, mull, batiste or handkerchief linen, or fine lawn. The bishop style is very quaint, and the little round yokes are pretty. The neck and wristband must not be too tight. Some very pretty little dresses may be found in the shops for quite reasonable sums. So many are necessary for the babykins that it is as well to buy a few ready made.

So much for the dresses. Then there are the booties. These are adorable things, quite fit to tread the rose-hued path of infancy. There is simply an endless variety of baby shoes. Three are shown in the sketch; a pair of costly fleece-lined booties, another of pink taffeta with ribbon rosettes, and a pair of soft kid Indian moccasins. Put this very mannish form of baby footwear on a wee boy, and he will crow with delight and immediately begin to kick and assert his manhood.

In the right-hand corner of the sketch is a merry little lad all ready for bed in his night-drawers and pointed cap. A pliant air has that cap. The whole outfit is simply ideal for a jolly pillow-fight on a winter's night. The grown-ups always long to join in, but of course they can't—the small fry would think it very odd of "the Olympians."

Hatpins Now Quite Small.
Hatpins have faded into inconspicuousness. Some of the prettiest and smartest of the new ones are of small enamel plaques in all tones of color.

PASSING OF TELLER

SUCCESSOR ELECTED TO COLORADO'S BRILLIANT SENATOR.

Has Unique Record in That He Has Served 18 Years as Republican and 12 Years as Democrat Without Interruption.

Washington.—Press dispatches recently announced simply that Charles J. Hughes of Denver has been elected to the United States senate to succeed Henry M. Teller. Literally that was all. Politically there was much more. It was that the election of Mr. Hughes marked the passing of Henry Moore Teller, the grand old man of the Rockies.

During one-third of a century Mr. Teller, to a greater or lesser extent, has been continuously before the eyes of the nation. For a large part of that time he held high rank in the councils of his party. Few able men have come out of the west and none who longer held the affections of his people. Yet when the final summary was made up, the only mention he received was that his name was among those entered.

Mr. Teller's entry into the senate was coincident with the entry of his state into the union. His record is unique in that he served in that body 18 years as a Republican, and then without missing a day he served 12 years more as an Independent and a Democrat. A few older men have been elected to the senate at different times by political parties of opposite beliefs, but a period intervened in which they waited for the people to experience a change. Mr. Teller repudiated his old affiliation and took up with the new without interruptions in his service.

Since Colorado has been a state one-half of its representation in the United States senate, except for three years, has been Henry M. Teller. The other half varied, as one term followed another, and the ability and character of that representation likewise varied.

Born in New York state in 1830, Mr. Teller when he became a young man, studied law and was admitted to the bar. He sought the great west in 1858, and as Illinois at that time seemed to be a long way toward the setting sun, he came to this state and began the practice of his profession. He only remained here two years, however, as he foresaw greater possibilities in the territory of Colorado.

That his judgment was good when he decided to take the long jump to the new and little known land in the Rockies was proved by the later events in his life. Fifteen years afterward, while the nation was celebrating its centennial, Colorado was admitted as a state, and among the first acts of its legislature was the election of Henry M. Teller as one of its representatives in the United States senate.

Chosen as a Republican, he served in the senate until in April, 1882, when he was called to President Arthur's cabinet as secretary of the interior. Here he twice honored his state—bringing it an important cabinet post after only six years of statehood, and being the instrument by which this distinction was given to a state beyond the great American plains.

Mr. Teller served as secretary of the interior during President Arthur's term, but near the close of the period there was a sensational election in Colorado, and he was offered his old seat. He accepted it, and when his work as cabinet member ended on March 4, 1885, he walked over to the capitol and took the oath of office as a senator.

A few years later the money question began to make trouble for men in public life, and what was destined to be Mr. Teller's greatest political sorrow began to take form. A financial stringency, followed by the repeal of the Sherman act, precipitated the free silver controversy upon the country, and Mr. Teller, an ardent advocate of free coinage, found himself in conflict with many of his political associates.

Subsequent developments are of too recent occurrence to require recounting here. Mr. Teller was approaching the end of his third senatorial term. His state was overwhelmingly for silver, but a majority of the leaders of the Republican party in the country at large were bending their efforts to obtain a declaration for the gold standard. The crisis for the Colorado man was near at hand. It came with the Republican national convention at St. Louis in 1896.
