

CHAUFFEUR WAS ON TO JOB

Smart Man Secured Taxicab, But the Last Laugh Really Was with the Driver.

Roger Enwright, Charles Maher and A. R. Davis stood at the side entrance to the Hollenden Saturday, wondering how to get home. Taxicabs were not to be had, cars were not running and they didn't feel the need of exercise badly enough to desire to walk.

A taxicab was standing near the hotel, but the porter had told them that it was engaged.

"Mebby we can talk this fellow into believing that one of us engaged his outfit," suggested Enwright. He walked up to the driver and inquired who he was waiting for.

"I ain't seen the gentleman," said the driver, "but I was ordered to wait here for a Mr. Wright—somebody from out of town, I guess."

"This is a cinch," thought Roger. "Wasn't the name Enwright instead of Wright?" he asked the man.

"It might have been."

"I thought this must be mine," says Enwright. "Come on, boys."

All got in and the man took them home.

When Enwright stepped out at his home at East Seventy-ninth street the man said the bill would be $8.50.

"What! That's an outrageous charge!" stormed Roger. "How do you figure any such bill as that just for coming out this short distance!"

"You must remember," says the driver, "that after you engaged the machine I waited there for you at the hotel for more than three hours before you got in."

That being the case Enwright paid the bill without further argument.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

THE GRAND DUKE'S MATCHBOX

Slight Forgetfulness Lost for Russian Noble Present Given Him by the Czar.

The Grand Duke Michael of Russia, the tsar's uncle, on the occasion of a visit to France, was walking down a Paris street, when a working man in corduroys stopped him and asked him for a light. The working man was smoking a very dirty little clay pipe. The grand duke had only just lit an excellent cigar. He glanced at the pipe, looked at his cigar, and, as he didn't want to spoil it, handed the workman his matchbox—a gold one with his initials in diamonds upon it.

The man took the box, struck a match, and lit his pipe. Then "Hallo" he said, looking at the box.

"What's the matter," said the grand duke, expecting a remark upon the beauty of the matchbox.

"Oh, nothing," said the man, "I won't give you away."

"What do you mean?" said Duke Michael. "I hope you don't suggest that I came by the box dishonestly."

"No, no," the man said. "I wasn't thinking about that at all. But you'll get into trouble if you don't take care. These matches of yours are contraband."

For it is quite illegal to bring matches into France from foreign countries, owing to the government monopoly.

A little later in the day, the grand duke told President Fallieres the story.

"And good gracious," he exclaimed suddenly, feeling in his pockets, "the beggar never gave me back my match box, and it was a present from the tsar."

Philippines' Best Fruit.

Philippine mangoes, to the mind of many Americans and foreigners the sweetest fruit grown anywhere, would alone make many millionaires in this country if the fruit could be successfully shipped, or, better still, grown here, as the Hawaiian papaya is now being made to grow in the Philippines. Spaniards spent thousands of dollars trying to get samples of the Philippine mango to their late queen, but with out avail. There is absolutely nothing to equal this fruit in the western hemisphere. Mangoes in New York would easily retail at from $1 to $1.25 a dozen, with the demand never fully supplied. One tree of enormous size is said to have produced 5,000 mangoes in one season. The fruit in shape and general appearance resembles a huge pear flattened to a thickness of about 1 1/2 inches. The skin is green and the meat pumpkin colored. The flavor can be compared to no fruit in this country; to appreciate its deliciousness one must eat a mango off the tree.—The Bookkeeper.

An Edible Flower.

An edible flower, the mhowad, is to be seen in one of Washington's botanical gardens. In India they make of this flower a soup, a bread, a wine and a brandy. The mhowad grows on a mhowad tree, as the tulip grows on the tulip tree. It is lemon-yellow in color, bigger than a tulip, and its corollae are pulpy and thick. Dried and pounded into a powder the mhowad makes a sweet, rich, wholesome bread. Fermented in spring water, a very delicate wine is yielded by the useful bloom, and distilled the mhowad renders up an aromatic and perfumed brandy which the Hindus, despite their temperance, find it difficult to resist.

Almost.

"It's wonderful how these Italian women can carry so much around on their heads, isn't it?"

"Yes, indeed. They almost equal their American sisters."—Town and Country.
