A Day of Mourning at Nebraska City guished Dead.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., May 1 .-Yesterday was a day of sorrow and mourning among the people of this city as the remains of the late J. Sterling Morton, the founder of many industries of this city and the father | bill was so overwhelming that only looking after general legislation that of Arbor day, arrived here, and the nine members backed a demand for will open the public domain to the people testified their respect for the the ayes and noes on the passage of cattlemen under the leasehood propmemory of one whom they held dear the bill. The remains arrived on a special train at 7:40, one hour ahead of scheduled time, over the Burlington road, consisting of a number of coaches and the funeral car, in which the remains wy in a casket covered with floral one ings from friends and relatives.

There was a monster crowd of people, representing every vocation in life, to pay tribute to the memory and assist in the removal of the remains from the train to the public library building, where they lay in state for over three hours. They were viewed

After lying in state at the library building, which was a present to the city from Mr. Morton's oldest son, Joy Morton, the remains were escorted to Arbor Lodge, the family home, and there they lay in state for three hours until the hour of the funeral. In each place the floral offerings, which were profuse, were banked about the casket, and so great was the supply of flowers that many of them were banked up in the ends of the room, making a very imposing sight.

The funeral services were conducted by Revs. Eason and Knickerbocker of the Episcopal church, and were mainly ritualistic. The remains lay in the room where those of his beloved wife, who died twenty-one years ago, and where also lay those of his favorite son Cart, a year ago last January, when they were brought here from Waukeegan, Ill., he having died very suddenly from pneumonia.

Special trains bearing friends from Omaha and Lincoln arrived at noon, and these people joined with the throng here in the cortege that escorted the remains to their last resting place at the cemetery, where they were laid by the side of those of his wife and son.

At noon all of the banks, business houses and industries closed, and the schools were closed early in the day.

MAKES PLACE FOR EVANS.

Vacant Place May Be Offered to Com-* missioner of Pensions.

WASHINGTON, April 30.-There is a probability that Commissioner of Pensions Evans will be offered the position of consul general to London to succeed William McKinley Osborne, whose death has been announced.

White House officials are reticent in regard to the matter as is also Mr. Evans, but there is reason to believe The school children came in line, that the president would very much like to have him accept it, and the chances are decidedly in tavor of its being offered him.

Mr. Osborne's death was not a surprise to his friends. He had been confined to his home since November last, suffering from Bright's disease and dropsy, which, latterly, affected his heart. He was conscious until near the end. The deceased never had been absolutely well since he arrivd in England.

President Roosevelt expressed himself as desirous of seeing the range problems of the west adjusted so the lands may be secured for small settlers with the least degree of hardship upon those now using them for grazing purposes. In the matter of removal of fences, which was taken up by the delegation, no assurance could be given of relief from the orders which have been issued by the interior department providing for taking down the fences around government land. The visiting cattlemen have little hope of securing any modification of the fence removal orders. They assert that the removal of the fences without the passage of the grazing land leasing law will cause the withdrawal of much capital from the cattle business and will force many investors and owners of herds to remove their property to Canada where the government is very liberal in its treatment of stock owners.

Before leaving the capital the cattlemen will endeavor to formulate a bill providing a leasing regulation applicable to the state of Nebraska, leaving other states to depend upon their own exertions to secure leasing legislation suitable to their needs.
