WORKS AS A STREET BEGGAR.

A Former Cass County Lady's Unique Way of Raising Church Money.

A Lincoln special to the Omaha World-Herald, under date of May 8th, says "that a number of Lincoln citizens were struck with a sympathy for a poor, bent, blind woman, who appeared on the streets playing a zither and singing in in a fortorn, cracked voice. She was seen for but a short time, during which the pennies, nickels and dimes rattled generously into the battered tincup. Today it was discovered that the beggar woman was Mrs. W. C. Frampton, one of the city's most popular residents, who had taken that method to raise a sum which she had promised to collect for a church fund. When her story was told at the meeting of the ladies' society of All Souls' church she was greeted with applause the novel method which she had originated. Many of her contributors had been among those of her own society, who had failed to recognize her, so completely had she disguised herself." Mrs. Frampton is a daughter of Mr. Henry Lehnhoff, one of Cass county's best citizens, living near College Hill, in which neighborhood no persons can boast of more friends than Mr. and Mrs. Frampton, and where the latter visited "the old folks at home" a short time since.

There is an addition in relation to the above that has not yet appeared in print, but was told to a Journal reporter by one of the family's most in timate friends. When this proceedare was proposed to Mr. Frampton by his excellent lady, and being a gentleman of a fun-loving dispoistion, and thinking to perpetrate a good joke on

The judgment secured five years ago in the district court of Cass county by William Sporer as adminstrator of the estate of Henry Hennings against the Rock Island Railroad company for the sum of $2,650 was ordered sent back to another tria! because Judge Ramsey erred in his instructions to the jury. Hennings was a well known farmer living in Cass county. On June 18, 1895, he was driving home with a 6 year-old daughter. Between South Bend and Murdock it was necessary to cross the Rock Island tracks where the road curved sharply. The passenger train was late and, coming at a

Mr. H. P. Burbage, a student at law in Greenville, S.
