IS ACQUITTED OF MURDER

Jury at Auburn Holds Killing of Father by Son Was Justifiable.

A special from Auburn gives the following in reference to the acquittal of Clarence Williams for the murder of his father: "The jury in the case of the State against Clarence Williams for tue killing of his father, Isaac Williams, which has been deliberating since Tuesday evening, reached a verdict of not guilty today at 1 o'clock.

"This case was one of the hardest fought that has been tried in this county for many years. The killing rose out of a family quarrel, which was commenced in the house at noon and continued to the barn yard, where one of the boys asked his father for money to attend school at Peru, and the father refused. This seemed to throw the father into a fit of passion and he grabbed a pitchfork and started for the boy, saying: "I'll money you." The older brother, standing near, seeing that his younger brother was in danger of being killed by the enraged father, ran to a shed nearby and secured a loaded shotgun, coming back to where the quarrel was going on and shot his father in the back as he was making for his brother with the pitchfork, killing him instantly. It also developed that the father had an uncontrollable temper and would fly into a fit of passion at the slighest provocation, and it was all the entire family could do at such times to keep him from doing bodily harm to some of them."
