HEROIC ACT OF RAILWAY FIREMAN

Rescues a Three Year Old Child Who Stood on Track

A special from Lincoln, under date of yesterday, gives the following account of the heroism of a Burlington fireman: "By crawling out on the pilot of an engine and grasping a child of 3 years who stood unconscious of danger on the track, and then throwing himself, with the child in his arms from the 'cow catcher' into a ditch by the track, Burlington fireman, Marion R. Lux, today saved the life of the little one, and escaped himself with severe bruises. The scene of Lux's heroic act was between the towns of Milford and Seward. The engineer of the freight on which Lux is fireman, first noticed the baby, a little girl, on the track some distance ahead; he blew the whistle and put on the brakes, but the child paid no heed and it was seen the train could not be stopped in time, Lux volunteered the rescue, climbed out on the running board, then to the pilot and grasped the child in the nick of time."

Paint Shops to Rebuild at Once

A large gang of workmen are now cleaning away the rubbish which had been left on the floor and around the remaining portion of the walls of the demolished portion of the Burlington paint shops. As soon as the rubbish can be cleared away so the workmen can get at the job the breach in the paint shops will be repaired. The amount of lumber and stuff which the flood carried there was so great that with the limited number of men at the disposal of the crews which were to do the cleaning away it was not possible to get at it sooner. Other portions of the shops whose service was needed much worse, had to receive attention first. It is expected that the rebuilding of the walls and the entire repairing of the damages done will be out of the way before the coming of winter.
