MARKET SEEMS MORE ACTIVE

Irregular Movement of Prices Due to Reaction in Business and Industry—Interest Rates Lower.

A special from New York, under date of January 20, says: Last week saw a considerable increase of activity in the market for securities, but the irregular movement of prices was a reflection of the conflicting influences at work. The most effective of these had to do with the technical position of the market itself, but there grew up mixed views as well regarding the general outlook for affairs as between the rapid restoration of normal banking conditions on the one hand and on the other, accumulating evidences of the extent of the reaction in industry and business and the results to be expected in the earning power of properties, with securities listed at the Stock Exchange.

The disclosure of the re-establishment of a comfortable surplus of reserves above the legal requirement, made in the bank statement of the previous week, served to quiet effectively allay apprehension over the money situation. The release of funds, which had been held back from banking reserve to await this showing, proceeded in a strong flood, and interest rates on loans of all kinds, declined in the market, both here and abroad. The development had been accurately foreseen by the speculative element in the securities markets and previous purchases had been made to take advantage of new outside demand, which would be stimulated by the increase of money facilities for use in stock operations. There was, in fact, a considerable accession of outside demand for stocks through commission houses, but the sales to realize profits by the powerful speculative party who had been pursuing organized operations in the previous market, served as a material offset to this demand.

Mercantile Needs Supplied.

The first and most important relief afforded by the pronounced relaxation of the money market has been in the facilities afforded for strictly mercantile needs. Anxiety on this point has practically passed away. The quick response of stocks of railroad-equipment companies to the news of the sale of $30,000,000 New York Central equipment already delivered, was significant of the field and extent of this anxiety. The sale of these notes was made much of as a proof of the restored confidence of capital and its willingness to seek renewed investment in corporate expenditures. This impression was modified by the terms of the sale, which were on an investment return of 5 1/2 to 5 3/4 per cent, with a marked preference for the series of notes with the longest term to run.

Retiring Loan Certificates.

The question of gold exports is brought forward by the sharp rise in foreign exchange towards the end of the week. It is pointed out, also, that while the easing of the money market has resulted in a rapid retirement of perhaps half of the loan certificates issued by the New York Clearing-house, there is an important residue of these instruments, which were issued for the relief of trust companies whose retirement may be delayed by the character of the collateral securing them, which is slow to be marketed.

Much of the most important contending influence against the growing case of the money market is the evidence of trade contraction and diminished profits. Railroad traffic has fallen to a low ebb and the American Railroad Association estimated 207,000 freight cars idle in the country. Heavy decreases in railroad earnings make up the burden of reports, and are accompanied by wide-reaching plans for curtailment of service, suspension of improvements, cutting down of working force and reduction of pay to those retained in service.

Some sign of improvement was reported from the iron and steel trade over the low point of activity at which the year opened. There is hope manifested that improvement is at hand, but the fact that present conditions are to be reflected in reports of earnings yet to be made up, makes the speculative temper apprehensive of effect of these reports as they shall come to-hand.

DIED AT THE ADVANCED AGE OF 93

Grandmother of T. B. and R. A. Bates Died Monday Evening at the Home of Her Daughter, in DeLand, Ill.

A telegram message received at this office brought the sad intelligence of the demise of Mrs. W. E. Barnett, grandmother of T. B. and R. A. Bates. Her death occurred at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Kate Kessler, in DeLand, Piatt county, Ill., with whom she had made her home for a number of years. The message did not state the cause of her death, but it is presumed her advanced years was the principal cause, as she had been enjoying fairly good health up to the hour of her passing away.

Grandma's maiden name was Miss Julia Batson, and she was born in Bourbon county, Ky., in 1815. Here she grew to womanhood and married W. E. Barnett, who died in Piatt county in 1875. They were pioneer settlers in Piatt county, having removed from Kentucky to that point in 1856, and there lived until death removed them. The deceased was a daughter of Elder Batson, one of the early pioneer Christian preachers in Kentucky, and was known throughout the south as one of the ablest preachers of his day.

Grandma Barnett was a true Christian woman, and possessed those true traits of character that endeared her to all who knew her. She always had a good word for everyone. While a mother of six children—four girls and two boys—but two survive her—W. D. Barnett, of Clinton, and Mrs. Kate Kessler, of DeLand, Ill., who cared for her in her declining years. The oldest son, T. J. Barnett, died several years ago, as also did Mrs. M. A. Bates, mother of T. B. and R. A. Bates and Mrs. Julia Bates Atkinson, of Denver, Colo.

Banks in Good Condition.

The failure of the Sovereign Bank of Canada, at Toronto, is in no way a sign of bad times in the Dominion, for other banks there were ready at once to take over its affairs with full guarantee of its notes and deposits. On the face of the news the troubles of the suspended institution were due to imprudent banking.

Advocates of a central bank for the United States will observe that the Sovereign Bank of Canada, a private joint-stock institution, had seventy-eight branches, and they may with profit ponder the problem of finding a competent and trustworthy manager for each of the several institutions in so complicated a system. The culmination of the troubles of Banker John R. Walsh, of Chicago, in conviction is only a side commentary on the dangers of keeping too many irons in the fire.

The trying experiences of the latter part of 1907 demonstrated that the banks of the United States, both State and National, are sound and well conducted. Depositors lost little or nothing by the few of them whose affairs were turned over to other hands. They are all now filling up with money are in good shape to finance the great commercial and industrial activities of the year just begun.

There will be no more scarcity of money until the height of the crop-movements season is reached again next fall, and then it will not be attended with the panicky conditions which were uppermost during the closing months of 1907. With cotton and wheat selling at unusually high prices, and tending toward still higher figures, there can be no real setback to prosperity in St. Louis and the regions which are its best customers.

Though it is only three weeks since the end of 1907 the new year is already old enough to give positive assurance that good times are to continue. After a pause the country has made up its mind that it was needlessly alarmed and has turned its face to the future with a confident stride. It could not do otherwise. The demand for commodities from busy producers with money in their pockets would not let business and industry be idle if they tried.
