Horning Cemetry.

Last Sunday all that was mortal of Jakie Beckman was deposited in the grave at the Horning cemetery amid the sorrowing tears of a multitude of body being taken to the United Brethren church where Rev. Brink preached a sermon which told in simple language glories of a pure, spotless life and the shining example which he had set, furnished the minister with a noble example for the young men of his congre-

Born less than twenty-three years ago, to be exact upon October 30, 1885, the young man had always lived in this open book, where there was none to single bad spot in his entire life. In its purity it was as that of the innocent babe. In one way nature had been unkind to him. Where many had enjoyed strong, lusty bodies and health never troubled by sickness he had been the victim of a sickly nature which wore out his young life all too soon. At the church in addition to the beautiful sermon, the choir sang several selections being led by Chas, Jean
