The Weather Conditions.

The expected change in the weather materialized last Saturday when a gentle rain began to fall and the atmosphere grew appreciably cooler. The change was quite welcome and everyone feels much the better for it. So far the rainfall has been very light, hardly sufficient to lay the dust and of no practical benefit to pastures or crops. There are indications that the conditions will improve and that the rainfall will increase later with much colder weather. From the northwest comes reports of heavy snow in Montana and Idaho and Northern Wyoming. It is not believed the snowfall will extend this far south but it will result in a sharp fall in temperature, and fires will be much more comfortable. The weather prediction for today is for rain and cooler, with showers in the east portion of the state tomorrow.
