Manley Sidetracks Have Been Built.

The Manley elevator case, one of the oldest on the docket of the Nebraska Railway commission, has been settled and wiped off of the docket. The case was filed by the Farmer's Elevator company of Manley, asking the commission to require the Missouri Pacific Railway company to build a sidetrack to its elevator October 21, 1907.

Paralell with the commission's work, a stubbornly fought case was taken through the Cass county district court, and the Nebraska supreme court and the federal court, the elevator company losing in the federal court, but won before the railway commission. In the meantime the sidetrack has been built.
