The Great Conservation Novel

CHAPTER VL IN THE VIOLENT PASY

ALKING about Cavanagh was quite too absorbingly interesting to both Lee and Redfield to permit of any study of the landscape, which went by as if dismissed by the chariot wheels of some contemptuous magician. Redfield's eyes were mostly on the road (in the manner of the careful auto driver), but when he did look up it was to admire the color and poise of his sent mate. who made the landscape of small ac count

She kept the conversation to the desired point. "Mr. Cavanagh's work interests me very much. It seems very important, and it must be new, 'for I never heard of a forest ranger when I was a child."

"The forester is new, at least in America," he answered. "My dear young lady, you are returned just in the most momentous period in the history of the west. The old dominion-the cattle range-is passing. The supremacy of the cowboy is ended. The cow boss is raising oats. The cowboy is pitching alfalfa and swearing horribly as he blisters his hands. Some of the rangers at the moment are men of western training, like Ross, but whose allegiance is now to Uncle Sam. With others that transfer of allegiance is not quite complete; hence the insolence of men like Gregg, who think they can bribe or intimidate these forest guards and so obtain favors. The newer men are college bred, real foresters. But you can't know what it all means till you see Ross or some other ranger on his own heath. We'll make up a little party some day and drop down upon him and have him show us about. It's a lonely life, and so the ranger keeps open house. Would you like to go?"

"Oh, yes, indeed. I'm eager to get into the mountains. Every night as I see the sun go down over them I wonder what the world is like up there." Then he began very delicately to inquire about her eastern experience. There was not much to tell. In a lovely old town not far from Philadelphia. where her aunt lived, she had spent ten years of happy exile. "I was horribly lonely and homesick at first," she said. "Mother wrote only short letters, and my father never wrote at all. I didn't know he was dead then. He the law,' I said. 'The law is all right.' was always good to me. He wasn't a bad man, was he?"

"No," responded Redfield without hesitation. "He was very like the rest of us, only a little more reckless and girl's mind, producing momentary a little more partisan, that's all. He was a dashing horseman and a dead shot, and so naturally a leader of these daredevils. He was popular with both sides of the controversy up to the very moment when he went south to lead the invaders against the rustlers."

first only a few outlaws took advantage of it, but hard years came on, the cattle business became less and less profitable, we were forced to lay off our men, and so at last the range swarmed with idle cowpunchers. Then came the breakdown in our scheme. The cowboys took to "mavericking" on their own account. Some of them had the grace to go into partnership with some farmer and so claim a small bunch of cows, but others suddenly and miraculously acquired herds of their own. From keeping within the law they passed to violent methods. They slit the tongues of calves for the purpose of separating them from their mothers. Finding he could not suck, bossy would at last wander away from his dam and so become a maverick. In in the regular army at the time. He short, anarchy reigned on the range."

"But surely my father had nothing to do with this?"

"No; your father up to this time had been on good terms with everybody. He had a small herd of cattle down the river, which he owned in common with a man named Hart" "I remember him."

"He was well thought of by all the big outfits, and when the situation became intolerable and we got together to weed out 'the rustlers,' as these cattle thieves were called, your father was approached and converted to a bellef in drastic measures. He had suffered less than the rest of us because of his small herd and the fact that he was very popular among the cowboys. So far as I was concerned, the use of violent methods revolted me. My training in the east had made me a respecter of the law. 'Change they replied; 'the trouble is with these rustlers. We'll hang a few of 'em, and that will break up the business."" Parts of this story came back to the flashes of perfect recollection. She heard again the voices of excited men arguing over and over the question of "mavericking," and she saw her father as he rode up to the house that last day before he went south. Redfield west on. "The whole plan does it matter? Each year sees the as developed was silly, and 1 wonder still that Ed Wetherford, who knew the 'nester' and the cowboy so well. should have lent his aid to it. The cattlemen, some from Cheyenne, some from Denver and a few from New York and Chicago, agreed to finance a a sort of vigilante corps composed of forest rangers lies the hope of ultimate men from the outside on the under- peace and order over all the public standing that this policing body should | lands. be commanded by one of their own number. Your father was chosen second in command and was to guide the party, for he knew almost every one of the rustlers and could ride directly to their doors."

By HAMLIN GARLAND Copyright. 1910, by Hamlin Garland

ere all too excited to sleep. It seemd as if the world were coming to an Mother cried because they wouldn't let her go with them. She didn't know father was leading the other army."

"She must have known soon, for fi was reported that your father was among them. She certainly knew when they were driven to earth in that log fort, for they were obliged to restrain her by force from going to your father. As I run over those furious days it all seems incredible, like a sudden reversion to barbarism."

came, didn't they?"

reached out and took hold upon the necks of both parties. I guess your father and his band would have died right there had not the regular army interfered. It only required a sergeant wearing Uncle Sam's uniform to come among those armed and furious cowboys and remove their prisoners."

"I saw that. It was very strangethat sergeant was so young and so brave."

He turned and smilled at her. "Do you know who that was?"

Her eyes flashed. She drew her breath with a gasp. "Was it Mr. Cavapagh?"

"Yes, it was Ross. He was serving has told me since that he felt no fear whatever. 'Uncle Sam's blue coat was like Siegfried's magic armor,' he said. 'It was the kind of thing the mounted police of Canada had been called upon to do many a time, and I went in and got my men.' That ended the war, so far as violent measures went, and it really ended the sovereignty of the cattleman. The power of the 'nester' has steadily increased from that moment.'

"But my father-what became of him? They took him away to the east, and that is all 1 ever knew. What do you think became of him?"

"I could never make up my mind. All sorts of rumors come to us concerning him. As a matter of fact, the state authorities sympathized with the cattle barons, and my own opinion is that your father was permitted to escape. He was afterward seen in Texas, and later it was reported that he had been killed there.'

The girl sat still, listening to the tire less whir of the machine and looking out at the purpling range with tear mist eyes. At last she said, "I shall was ragged and abrupt at this point. never think of my father as a bad man They passed several charming farm--he was always so gentle to me.'

UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE

Improved Order of Red Men

-A GRAND OLD FASHIONED PROGRAM IS BEING PREPARED!-Good Speaking! Splendid Band Music! Many Sports! Grand Display of Fireworks! Watch these columns for further announcements, and make it a point to

- Celebrate in Plattsmouth! -

HEVER

"RLEANOR, THIS IS MISS WETHERFORD."

matched fairly well with the account

her husband had given. Her prejudices were swept away, and she treated her young guest as one well born and well educated woman treats an-

At last she said: "We dress for din-

Lee Virginia went to her room borne felt very much like the schoolgirl rocker with intent to compose herself

She heard voices in the hall and accent, one that sounded precisely like

At last she dared walt no longer and,

taking courage from necessity, de-those she had heard on the stage.

"What was it all about? I never understood it. What were they fighting about ?"

"In a sense it was all very simple You see. Uncle Sam in his careless, do nothing way has always left his range to the man who got there first. That was the cattleman. At first there was grass enough for us all, but as we built sheds and corrals about watering places we came to claim rights on the range. We usually secured by fraud homesteads in the sections containing water and so, gun in hand, 'stood off' the man who came after. Gradually, after much shooting and lawing, we parceled out the range and settled down, covering practically the whole state. Our adjustments were not perfect, but our system was working smoothly for us who controlled the range. We had convinced ourselves and pretty nearly everybody else that the state was only fit for cattle grazing and that we were the most competent grazers; furthermore, we were in possession, and no man could come in without our consent.

"However, a very curious law of our own making was our undoing. Of it.' course the 'nester' or 'punkin roller.' as we contemptuously called the small farmer, began sifting in here and there in spite of our guns, but he was only a mosquito bite in comparison with the trouble which our cowpunchers stirred up. Perhaps you remember enough Redfield resumed, his speech showing about the business to know that an unbranded yearling calf without its mother is called a maverick?"

"Yes; I remember that. It belongs to the man who finds him and brands him."

"Precisely. Now, that law worked very nicely so long as the poor cowboy was willing to catch and brand other one they most barbarously him for his employer, but it proved a hanged. More than this, they attack-his fellows, 'Why brand these mayericks at $5 per head for this or that outfit when the law says they belong to the man who finds them?"

Lee Virginia looked up brightly. "That seems right to me."

"Ah, yes, but wait! We cattlemen had large herds, and the probabilities were that the calf belonged to some one of us, whereas the cowboy, having no herd at all, knew the maverick belonged to some one's herd. True, the law said it was his, but the law did not mean to reward the freebooter. Not that is exactly what it did. At

"I wish 'e hadn't done that," murmured the girl.

"I must be frank with you, Virginia, I can't excuse that in him. It was a kind of treachery. He must have been warped by his associates. They convinced him by some means that it was his duty, and one fine day the Fork was startled by a messenger who rode in to say that the cattle barons were coming with a hundred Texas bad men 'to clean out the town' and to put their own men into office. This last was silly rot to me, but the people believed

The girl was tingling now. "I remember! I remember the men who rode into the town to give the alarm.

I was scared almost breathless." "I was in Sulphur City and did not hear of it till it was nearly all over." a little of the excitement which thrilled through the girl's voice. "Well, the first act of vengeance was so ill considered that it practically ended the whole campaign. The invaders fell for you in Roaring Fork. Perhaps upon and killed two ranchers, one of your mother's advice is sound. Why whom was probably not a rustler at not come to Sulphur City, which is all, but a peaceable settler, and the almost entirely of the new spirit?" 'joker' when he woke up and said to ed and vainly tried to kill two settlers whom they met on the rond-German farmers, with no connection, so far as known, with the thieves. These men escaped and gave the alarm. In a few hours the whole range was aflame with vengeful fire. The Forks, as you may recall, was like a swarm of bumblebees. Every man and boy was armed and mounted. The storekeepers distributed guns and ammunition, leaders developed, and the embattled 'punkin rollers.' rustlers and townsmen rode out to meet the invaders." The girl paled with memory of it. "It was terrible. I went alleday without enting, and for two nights we then turned up the stream directly to- cured a little more of her story, which ganization will be effected,

"You need not condemn him, my dear young lady. The people of the Forks-some of them, at least-conthe daughter of a renegade, but what old west diminish, and already, in the work of the forest service, law and order advance. Notwithstanding all the shouting of herders and the beating to death of sheep, no hostile shot has ever been fired within the bounds of a | fessional gardener. national forest. In the work of the

The girl fell silent again, her mind filled with larger conceptions of life than her judgment had hitherto been called upon to meet. She knew that Redfield was right, and yet that world of the past-the world of the swift herdsman and his trampling, long horned, half wild kine-still appealed to her imagination. The west of her girlhood seemed herolc in memory. Even the quiet account of it to which she had just listened could not conceal its epic largeness of movement. The part which troubled her most was her father's treachery to his neighbors. That he should fight, that he should kill men in honorable warfare, she could understand, but not his recreancy, his desertion of her mother and herself.

She came back to dwell at last on the action of that slim young soldier who had calmly ridden through the infuriated mob. She remembered that she had thrilled even then at the vague and impersonal power which he represented. To her childish mind he seemed to bear a charm, like the heroes of her story books-something which made him invulnerable.

After a long pause Redfield spoke again. "The memory of your father will make life for a time a bit hard

"If I can get my mother to come, too, I will be glad to do so, for I hate the Fork. But I will not leave her there, sick and alone."

"Much depends upon the doctor's examination tomorrow."

They had topped the divide now beween the Fork and Sulphur creek basin, and the green fields, the alfalfa meadows and the painted farmhouses thickened beneath them. Strange how significant all these signs were now! A few days ago they had appeared doubtful improvements; now they represented the oncoming dominion of the east. They meant cleanliness and de cent speech, good bread and sweet butter.

Redfield swept through the town.

houses, and the western sky grew ever more glorious with its plum color and saffron, and the range reasserted its mastery over the girl. At last they sider him a traitor and regard you as came to the very jaws of the canyon, and there, in a deep natural grove of lofty cottonwood trees, Redfield passed before a high rustic gate which marked the beginning of his estate. The driveway was of gravel, and the intermingling of transplanted shrubs and pine trees showed the care of the pro-

The house was far from being a castle. Indeed, it was very like a house in Bryn Mawr, except that it was built entirely of half hewn logs, with a wide projecting roof. Glant hydrangeas and other flowering shrubs bordered the drive, and on the rustle terrace a lady in white was waiting.

Redfield slowed down and scrambled ungracefully out. But his voice was charming as he suid: "Eleanor, this is Miss Wetherford. She was on the point of getting the blues, so I brought her away," he explained.

other. Mrs. Redfield, quite as urban as the ner, but any trock you have will do, house, was a slim little woman of dei-Icate habit, very far from the ordinary We are not ironclad in our rules. conception of a rancher's wife. Her There will be some neighbors in, but manner was politely considerate, but it isn't in any sense a 'party.' " not heatedly cordlal (the visitor was high upon a new conception of the posnot precisely hers), and, though she sibilities of the west. It was glorious warmed a little after looking into Virto think that one could enjoy the reginia's face, she could not by any stretch of phrase be called cordial. "Are you tired? Would you like to lie down before dinner?" she asked. "Oh, no, indeed. Nothing ever tires me," Virginia responded, with a smile. all she had for evening wear. She "You look like one in perfect health." continued her hostess in the envious again, and after she had done her best tone of one who knew all too well what ill health meant. "Let me show you to your room."

for her meeting with strangers. "1 The house was not precisely the palwish we were dining without visitors." ace the cowboy had reported it to be, she said as she heard a carriage drive but it was charmingly decorated, and up. A little later a galloping horse enthe furnishings were tasteful. To the tered the yard and stopped at the door. girl It was as if she had been transported with instant magic from the among them one with a very English horrible little cow town back to the home of one of her dearest friends in Chester. She was at once exalted and humbly grateful.

scended the stairs, a pleasant picture "We dine at 7," Mrs. Redfield was saying, "so you can take a cup of tea of vigorous yet somewhat subdued known of several who have purmeldenhood without spoiling your dinner. Will you venture it?"

"If you please."

"Very well, come down soon and I'll have it ready. Mr. Redfield, I'm sure, Good Roads Meeting at Louisville. will want some.'

Virginia's heart was dancing with delight of this home as she came down Louisville on Monday afternoon, loss on the I. Pearlman property, the stairs a little later. As they talked June 12, at 1:30 o'clock. Every-, paying the carpenter's estimate Mrs. Redfield studied the girl with in- one interested in the movement without objection. The estimate creasing interest and favor and soon for better roads should be on ,was placed at $175, and Mr. Pearlgot at her point of view. She even see hand, when a permanent or- man received a check for the

ANCE CO. OF PITTSBURG

One of the Strongest Companies Ever Organized in the United States or Europe.

Today life insurance, of the substantial sort, is recognized throughout this country as the one legitimate business propositions deemed a necessity and a duty by every man between the ages of 20 and 65 years. It is the one legitimate business proposition upon which all men stand equal and are dealt with equally, The man who tills the soil, even though he may not own an acre, can buy life insurance on equal terms and with equal results with the banker, the merchant and the millionaire. No other business proposition is like it.

The Reliance Life Insurance Company of Pittsburg, one of the strongest companies ever organized in the history of life insurance, now has an agent in this community in the person of W.J. Thomas, General Agent for Southeastern Nebraska.

In addition to the usual liberal features which most old-line comfinement, the comfort, of the east at panies incorporate in their the same time that one dwelt within policies, the Reliance policies prothe inspiring shadow of the range. | vide that all premiums shall cease Her hands were a-tremble as she put, should the insured become totally on the bright muslin gown which was | and permanently disabled for life by bodily injury or disease.

The Reliance Life refers by permission to H. N. Dovey, to look nice she took a seat in the little Cashier of the First National Bank of Plattsmouth.

Prosecuting Stale Egg Vendors.

The pure food commissioner is prosecuting the stale egg vendors in every part of the state. We have heard of no prosecutions in this section, and we hope there will be no cause for bringing such action, yet we would advise our farmer friends and the merchants to be on the lookout. We have chased eggs at the stores recently that were unfit for use.

Adjust I. Pearlman Loss.

The Fireman's Insurance company of New Jersey adjusted the amount.

There will be a meeting at

(To Be Continued.)