Des Moines, June 19 .- The first rural life summer school in lowa is well under way at the state agricultural college at Ames. It is a decided success, although the attendance is not large, for it is a new thing in an era of summer schools, short courses and specialties in education.

The lowa summer school is for the special purpose of helping all who are interested in the rural life problem and especially the teachers and ministers who have to deal directly with rural life and education. The school is to last two weeks. It has in addition to the ordinary branches, special work in home economics, manual training, animal husbandry, agriculture, farm crops and horticulture.

The school is in charge of Professor A. V. Storm, assisted by other members of the regular college faculty and also W. F. Kramer of Red Oak instructor in manual training. There were the last week enrolled in this school twenty men and forty seven women. Of the women five ara three manual training.

At the close of the school this week there will be one day given over to a others who will speak is Henry Wallace, president of the National Conservation congress. Professor P. G Holden will speak of the work of the grange in its relations to reral life. It is the intention to have this summer school and convention each year
