

WEEKLIES MAY RAISE PRICES

Iowa Newspaper Men Reach Conclusion at Conference.

CLUB WOMEN ARE UP IN ARMS.

Declare City Councilmen of Des Moines Promised Same Fourth and Now Will Not Make Necessary Order—Smallpox at Teachers' College.

Des Moines, June 24.—Horace Barnes, editor of the Albia Republican, was elected president of the Southern Iowa Editorial association; W. H. Davidson, managing editor of the Burlington Hawkeye, was elected vice president, and O. E. Hull of the Leon Reporter was elected secretary. There was much discussion of the advisability of raising the price of the weekly newspapers and most of those present favored a general increase in prices. Burlington gets the 1912 summer meet.

Club Women Want Same Fourth.

The club women of Des Moines are ready to make war on the members of the city council who have refused to consider the passage of more stringent ordinances in regard to the celebration of the Fourth. They claim that members of the council were elected on a pledge that they would try to secure a safe and sane celebration and now they refuse to do anything. The women insist that the state laws are so strongly against them they will not entirely forbid noise in the city.

Smallpox in Teachers' College.

An outbreak of smallpox at the State Teachers' college at Cedar Falls has caused the state board of education to request an emergency appropriation of $5,000 from the state executive council for the purpose of erecting a hospital at the institution. The council, in conference in the governor's office, practically reached the conclusion that it cannot make the appropriation. The attorney general will be asked for a construction of the law.

VICTORIA, OLD NEW YORK HOTEL, SOLD FOR $8,000,000

City's Night Life Centered About It Thirty Years Ago.

The Hotel Victoria, New York, is to be torn down and a twenty story business building erected on its site. Lady Almeric Hugh Paget and John S. Melcher sold the property for $8,000,000. The Victoria is the last survivor of a famous group of hotels about which the night life of the town used to center thirty years ago, a link between the old lower Broadway hotels of the last generation and the modern steel structures of today farther uptown. It was opened in 1879.

For many years a large portrait of Queen Victoria was hung in its lobby, and it straightway became a favorite place for English visitors to stop. Actor folk also showed a fondness for it. Sir Henry Irving making his headquarters there while playing here. The statesmen seemed inclined to cling to the Fifth Avenue, at least those of the Republican persuasion, but an attempt was made to make it a Democratic hangout. President Cleveland helped some. He stopped there at the time of the Columbian celebration, as did also other members of his cabinet.

In 1895 the hotel was closed, the hotel center already having begun to move northward again. It remained empty for five years, when "Plunger" Walton reopened it. In 1903 the present proprietors took a ten year lease of it. Like the Fifth Avenue, it felt the competition of the newer type of hotels keenly, but for awhile it took a new lease of life and attracted many of its former patrons again, even the politicians. Its passing will practically mean the end of what for many years was a famous hotel center.

SUPREME COURT'S WORK.

Great Amount to Be Done When Judges Return From Vacation.

Coincident with the closing of the term of the supreme court of the United States and the departure of the justices for their summer vacations has been the planning of an immense amount of work for the court when it meets again next October.

Thirty-five cases, some of them of far-reaching importance, have been advanced for hearing on the first day of the next term "or as soon thereafter as practicable." The quoted phrase is estimated to mean a month, for it is said that it will take at least that time to hear the arguments in all these cases.

Among the cases advanced are those involving the validity of the indictment of Charles F. Munday and others growing out of the so called Stracey coal lands claims in Alaska and of the indictment of James A. Patten and others on charges of violating the Sherman anti-trust law in "cornering" the cotton market. The review of the trial of Frederick A. Hyde and others on charges of land frauds on the Pacific coast will be another prominent case.

In addition to these the court will have under advisement during the summer about a dozen cases which were argued in the term just closed, but not decided. Probably the most important of these is that involving the constitutionality of the federal employers' liability act of 1908.

A RISE IN MUTTON.

Only the Leg Went Up, and Then There Came a Drop.

In the "zoo old days" at the Haymarket theater there was being played a musical farce in which was required a real boiled leg of mutton every night. This, according to the law of "property," or, rather, the "property man's" law, went after the performance almost untouched to the official named. But the "dymen" perched up aloft did not like this, for they, too, had wives and families, to whom a boiled leg of mutton would have been a thing to be remembered.

So they hit upon a plan, and one night William Farren, who had the carving of the joint, was asked to fix a hook that would be let down from the flies into the mutton and "leave the rest to them." Farren, always ready for a practical joke, consented and as the scene was coming to a termination fastened the hook into the leg of mutton. As scene shifters were preparing to "close in" and the property man stood in the wings ready to seize on his perquisite the leg of mutton was seen slowly to ascend.

The audience laughed. Henry Compton, who was watching the maneuver, laughed, too, and the employees all gave vent to their feelings in ill suppressed merriment, all except the property man, who remained miserably serious and gazed at the fast departing supper with a woebegone countenance. Suddenly as the scene was almost closed in the book, which Farren had unfortunately fastened only in the fat, gave way, and down came the coveted mutton with a terrific splash upon the dish.

The audience now roared, the employees roared, both Farren and Compton roared, and as the "flats" hid the unrebekured tableau from view the now delighted property man rushed upon the stage and secured his ill treated supper. — London Family Herald.

BELLBOY TO PROFESSOR.

Japanese Who Worked as Hotel Servant Had Harvard Degree.

A good looking, quiet mannered Japanese who has been a bellboy at a Boston hotel will carry bags for guests no longer. He sailed recently for Japan, where he will be known as Professor Yoshio Tanikawa, head of the department of philosophy in the University of Kioto.

Yoshio, as he was known, received the degree of master of arts from Harvard last year after a year in the graduate school, having previously obtained his bachelor's degree at a Minneapolis institution.

The young Japanese has refused to tell why he became a bellboy. When asked whether it was on account of the money he earned or the chance it gave him to study practical philosophy he merely smiled.

When He Was Bad.

It has been said that you never know a man till you travel with him, and certainly traveling has a tendency to bring out all the depravity innate in human nature. Out of this test, however, Benjamin Disraeli emerged with flying colors. This is what was said of him by Mrs. Austen, who with her husband traveled with him when he was quite a young man, as related in Mr. Monypenny's biography:

"Your brother," she says (the letter was addressed to Disraeli's sister), "is so easily pleased, so accommodating, so amusing and so actively kind that I shall always reflect upon the domestic part of our journey with the greatest pleasure. Your brother has behaved excellently, except when there is a button, or, rather, buttons, to be put on his shirt; then he is violently bad, and this happens almost daily."

Witty Ann Pitt.

Bolingbroke called England's great statesman, William Pitt (Lord Chatham), "Sublimity Pitt," and he dubbed his sister Ann "Divinity Pitt." But that must have been long after there were written and received the delightful letters addressed to Pitt's "Dearest Nanny," his "little Nan," his "little Jug."

"Oh, for the restless tongue of dear little Jug!" he exclaims in a letter written by him from Northampton when, a lad of twenty-three, he had but lately joined his regiment.

Ann Pitt's restless tongue was never stilled, for when Chesterfield, calling on her in his later life, complained of decay with the words, "I fear that I am growing an old woman," Ann briskly replied:

"I am glad of it. I was afraid you were growing an old man, which, as you know, is a much worse thing."

Representative Lee O'Neil Browne of Ottawa assaulted E. O. Phillips, the legislative correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, in the speaker's room at Springfield. Mr. Phillips was unconscious for forty minutes.
