Surprise on Miss Newbranch.

Last night Miss Grace Newbranch, one of the popular teachers of the High school, was busily engaged with one of her friends thumping out some late rag-time, when a dozen of the young people appeared with bottles of milk, olives, oysters and bunches of celery, together with packages of other edibles sufficient for a famished troop of cavalry. Recovering from the first shock of the surprise, Miss Newbranch welcomed them heartily and all were soon having the time of their lives. What matter though one of the young cooks got the soup too hot and singed it and another boiled the water and put the coffee on cold? It was all the same to them; for each was so interested in the companion on the right—or left, possibly—that the earth might have passed away unnoticed by brave Lechinvar or fair Ellen. Near the midnight hour the company broke up. Those present were: Misses Gretchen Donnelly, Marie Donnelly, Anderson, Minor, Catherine Doye and Newbranch, and Messrs. Richey, Fritz Fricke, Ed Fricke, Brady, Travis and Bruce Rosenerans.
