A Beautiful Tribute.

Several days ago we were standing on the street talking to a business man of our town. The dusky shadows were enveloping the earth and it was not easy to distinguish persons passing along unless particular attention was called to them. While talking a lady passed by and the gentleman asked us whether we knew who it was. We replied that we did not. He said, "That is the prettiest and best woman in town." Wishing to know what lady possessed such qualities, we asked him her name and he said, "That is my wife." No finer tribute could be paid to any woman than this husband paid to his wife, though she was not conscious of it. Such tributes are deserved by tens of thousands of women and yet they remain unsaid by unthinking, thoughtless husbands. "Kind words fitly spoken are like apples of silver in pictures of gold." Who is it that does not appreciate the kind word opportunely spoken? A little commending praise at the right time? A recognition of something done, though it be a trifle? Thousands of noble women never hear a word of praise from their husbands and it saddens the sensitive nature and causes shadows to fall on the love-fire that was once bright as the stars on a clear night. "The prettiest and best woman in town." Who can coin a grander sentiment? Husbands have the floor to beat it.
