Chickens Scored Very High.

From Tuesday's Daily.

Rev. W. L. Austin, who had some of his fine White Plymouth Rock chickens on exhibition at the poultry show at Ashland last week, made a great hit and his fowls succeeded in carrying off a large number of prizes and were scored very highly as follows: 91 1/2, 92, 93 1/4, 94 and 94. They also received prizes in the different classes as follows: First cash premium in American class, second cash premium in American class, first prize ribbon for hen; first prize ribbon for pullet; second prize ribbon for cockerel, cash special for highest scoring Plymouth Rocks, sweepstakes ribbon for highest scoring bird in American class, which included thirteen varieties of chickens. Rev. Austin is very proud of his fine chickens and has devoted a great deal of time to their care, and the results speak well for the time spent in the improvement of his pen.

M. P. STATION IMPROVEMENTS

Depot Buildings Repainted and Electric Lights to Be Installed in Place of Oil Lamps.

From Wednesday's Daily.

The Missouri Pacific Railroad company this morning began the work of painting their passenger station in this city, as well as the freight house and the residence of the section foreman. This work is part of the general plan of improvements undertaken by this road, which was outlined in the Journal some time since, and will place their property all along the Nebraska lines in good condition and will prove a great comfort to the traveling public.

The depot here is to be painted all over, the interior varnished and the entire structure overhauled and cleaned and made one of the neatest passenger stations in this part of the state. In addition to the painting of the station the company will install electric lights to replace the old out-of-date oil lamps which, will make a big hit with those traveling over this road, as the light furnished in the depot has been miserable in the past and Agent Norton is to be congratulated, on having secured this improvement in the comfort of the depot.

The railroad company has been debating the question of moving the depot further east, but there has been some doubt as to whether or not they could do this without having to take up part of the street, but whether they are able to do this or not, the new improvements made at the present time will be greatly appreciated, not only by the patrons of the road, but the citizens in general, as it will add very much to the appearance of that portion of the city, and when the contemplated changes in the Burlington station are made Plattsmouth can boast of two very handsome and modern depots, which will make gateways to the city of which we need not be ashamed.

Sold to Satisfy Mortgage.

From Tuesday's Daily.

This morning Sheriff Quinton sold the land belonging to the late William Sayles to satisfy a mortgage and note held by the estate of his daughter, Miss Eva Sayles. The mortgage was given to the daughter several years ago, and on the death of the daughter several months ago, the administrator, Mrs. Georgia Rykert, asked for the foreclosure of the mortgage, and the property was ordered sold. Mrs. Rykert purchased the property at the sale. On the death of the wife of Mr. Sayles several years ago the little daughter was taken by her aunt, Mrs. Rykert's mother, to bring up, and she made her home with them in New York until her death. William Sayles was killed at his farm, south of this city, about a year ago, by Henry Burrows, who is serving a life sentence in the penitentiary for the crime.

From Tuesday's Daily.

The bastardy case of Miss Martha Weitzel against Fred Ethredge, of Greenwood, which was set for trial in Justice Archer's court this morning, was continued until December 27, owing to the sickness of the plaintiff, who was injured in a collision between the buggy in which she was riding and an automobile near Greenwood last week.

STORY OF "BOUGHT AND PAID FOR"

Synopsis of the Story From Which This Great Play Secures Its Foundation.

It took seven years for George Broadhurst to construct "Bought and Paid For," after the main underlying idea of the play, which has run a year at William A. Brady's Playhouse, had taken root in his mind.

"Bought and Paid For" will be the attraction at the Parmele theater next Saturday night. A very vital part of the play is founded on fact. A woman, the most brilliant and accomplished woman the author ever knew, related to him the incident which he afterward turned into the kernel of "Bought and Paid For."

The story was introduced in illustration of her theory that unhappy marriages most often resulted from the fact that in courtship both parties in interest reveal only one side of their natures, concealing the other phases until they come to the surface in the day-to-day intimacy which follows the wedding.

A young girl, who was just out of a convent, met a fine, dashing fellow in her native city, who was a periodical drunkard. When intoxicated he was a beast. His parents concealed the fact in the blind hope that through his love for this girl he might be induced to reform. She married him, and in three weeks' time he came home drunk. The bride never had seen anyone in that condition, and was horrified. She left him immediately. Next day the husband's parents, who were rich and of high social standing, went to see her.

They admitted that they had been wrong in a measure, and implored her not to precipitate a scandal. They occupied a great mansion and begged that she come to live with them. She would have apartments adjoining their own, and her husband should be quartered in another and distinct part of the house. She should be protected absolutely from contact with him, should not even see him. The young wife yielded to the appeal and matters went along upon this basis for some months.

One night the husband's parents went to the opera. The wife was ill and remained secluded in her rooms. The husband came home, brutishly inebriated, and finding himself locked out of his wife's apartment, kicked in the door by way of asserting his nuptial rights. Next morning she fled from the house. The father and mother sought her out again. "It is hopeless," said the old gentleman. "Get your divorce. I will help you."

The distracted girl asked the reason for this abrupt change of front. "We believed there was still a chance for his reformation," explained the father. "We know now that it is impossible. Yesterday he received a check for the pay-roll of my business employees. An hour ago I was called up on the telephone by the keeper of the most notorious resort in the city. She told me my son came there late last night, had the check cashed and spent the money in a vile debauch. The woman suggested that a man in my position might not wish to have his check collected through her bank and carrying her indorsement, and that she would hold it until I sent over the cash to take it up. We cannot ask you to sacrifice yourself further for a man of my son's character and associates."

One of the Most Enjoyable Events That Has Happened in the Community for Years.

From Wednesday's Daily.

Last Saturday evening the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Shrader, northeast of Union, was the scene of a most enjoyable gathering, about sixty of their friends coming in to spend a most joyful occasion, and the Shrader home is certainly the place to have it. The Shrader-Lewis orchestra furnished some very pleasing musical selections during the course of the evening, as well as a quartet composed of Misses Mabel Shrader, Mae Lewis, Wayne and Lloyd Lewis, which sang several numbers that were highly appreciated by the merry crowd.

As a fitting climax to the enjoyment of the evening a most delicious four-course luncheon was served to the guests, which, if it were possible, added to the already delightful evening. Mr. and Mrs. Shrader are royal entertainers and the guests were very sorry to see the hour for them to leave roll around, and they all departed wishing to again be guests at the Shrader home.

CLOSE CALL FROM ASPHYXATION OF THE ENTIRE FAMILY

From Wednesday's Daily.

The family of J. C. Brittain had a very close call last evening from asphyxiation from the gas escaping from a base burner in their home. The family had retired to bed and when Mr. Brittain returned home from the fire meeting he was greatly alarmed at the amount of gas in the room and at once aroused the family, who were in a very stupified condition, and opened the doors and windows, letting the gas escape. Mrs. Brittain is still feeling quite sick from the effects of the gas and had Mr. Brittain been an hour later in returning there is no doubt that some of the family would have experienced very serious results from the gas. In regulating the stove for the night some of the drafts had been left open, causing the gas to escape into the room, with the results as noted above.
