THOUGHT FOR TODAY.

When we feel a strong desire to thrust our advice on others, it is usually because we suspect their weakness, but we ought rather to suspect our own. —Unknown Author.

Business is going to pick up now.

Nearly everyone is exceeding the speed limit at sleeping these nights.

The demand for ice is not so great as it was a few days ago in Plattsmouth.

Cheer up; the buckwheat crop is estimated at $15,000,000 bushels. Now scratch!

The millers must guarantee that it won't shrink or make allowances accordingly.

The two biggest days that Plattsmouth will enjoy this year are German days, October 18 and 19. Remember the dates.

A woman was recently arrested in Omaha for wearing men's clothes on the street. It developed the woman was the wife of a preacher.

The patrons of the Lincoln Telephone and Telegraph company at Beatrice do not intend that the rates shall be raised on them without a struggle for justice and right.

In time Thaw will probably be back in the asylum, and be generally forgotten by the plain people, but the lawyers can be relied on to keep an eye on him. While Thaw has life they have hope.

A moving picture recently showed a husband and wife making it up after she had flirted with another man. The ending was most satisfactory to many in the audience, but it is the modern way.

There is something about the published pictures of Huerta that repels—that bespeaks a rough, brutal, cold-blooded disposition. Every time one sees it, somehow one hopes Uncle Sam will never have to recognize him as head of the Mexican nation.

A bill has been introduced in congress to prohibit the slaughter of cattle under two years of age. This is aimed against the veal trade, and to conserve meat producing animals until they are at an age to yield beef and thus militate against the high cost of living. The bill is a good one but should go farther and prohibit the destruction of lambs. Millions of calves and lambs are slain each year to satisfy the palates of meat epicures. The prohibition is practical and follows, in so far as it aims to conserve these species of animals, the prohibitions in most states in taking fish less than a certain size which refers to the age. It is probable that a national law could only reach interstate commerce in these young animals but a national law would undoubtedly be followed by state laws on the subject which can not come too soon to help increase the meat supply.

We heard an old republican say yesterday: "Woodrow Wilson is all right!" You bet he is.

The summer has been severe on the most of us, but such a cinch on the weather forecaster.

The trading stamp king recently died. What's the use of making a fortune in an original way

Huerta's message to the Mexican congress doesn't sound like a man who wants to be a candidate for president next month.

There promises to be a big time at the rifle range, October 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11. One whole week of shooting practice.

Not even the refusal of England and Germany to take part in the Panama Pacific exposition is going to take the "frisk" out of Frisco.

The policy of the administration at Washington toward Mexico is not to be changed. President Wilson is not of the changeable kind.

There are many things that Plattsmouth business men can do that will help them in business. But the principal one is to always remember is the golden rule.

Americans in Mexico who have protested against President Wilson's suggestion to leave, have removed a large portion by any right they had to call on the old folks at home.

The proposition to give a cook book to each prospective bride in Chicago would remedy the divorce evil, in the opinion of a man of that city. It might do the business in some cities but never in Chicago.

Eight hundred women clerks in the U. S. treasury department have been forbidden to carry bags containing toilet articles into the offices where they are employed. Without the aid of that powder puff some of them will probably be just as homely as those new nickels.

The difference between the person who wants to vote and can't and the person who can vote, and does not want to is usually a difference of sex. One of the reasons a woman wants to does not care to vote is the fact that he can. Isn't that funny? vote is the fact that she cannot, and one of the reasons a man But it's natural.

Plattsmouth being the county-seat, and the only city in the county, we should cater to the desires of the people of Cass county. When the farmers come to this city to buy goods, the merchants should treat them in such a manner as to make them want to come again, and to continue to come. When the farmer learns that he can get the goods he desires just as cheap here as he can get them in Omaha, he will buy them here. The farmer and merchant alike are interested in the upbuilding of the town and county. Neither have the desire to tear down the other. It is just as easy to dwell together in one fraternal union—helping one another—as it is otherwise. Let us keep together—the closer we get the better it will be for all concerned.

BEED CORN FOR NEXT YEAR.

There is scarcely a year in which the farmers do not have a seed corn problem, says Wallace's Farmer. At first sight the reader will say: We can not possibly have a seed corn problem this year. The unusual heat in all sections of the west is pushing the corn forward until there is no danger of its being caught by frost. By husking time much of it will be as dry as it would ordinarily be next spring. All of which is true; but how about the farmers in the drouth stricken sections? In many places there is no corn at all, and in other places simply nubbins, poorly developed and unfit for seed.

The answer of some will be that there will be plenty of good, sound corn elsewhere, and it can be shipped in. True, but the experience of farmers, and the experiments at the stations, have shown that no corn shipped into a country does as well as corn of the same quality that was grown in that section. In other words, corn gradually adapts itself to its environment. Any corn brought in from another environment will not do its best, will not, in fact, feel at home for two or three years.

What then, are the farmers in the drouth stricken sections to do for seed corn? They can do one of two things. They can either take their chances on corn shipped in, which is a mighty long chance at best, or they can use corn of 1912 for the planting of 1914.

We advise our readers in those sections to do the latter, and to go about it at once. For the first thing you know, every crib of old corn of good quality in the neighborhood will be bought up and shipped to seedsmen in the cities, and then shipped back, perhaps sometimes to the same neighborhood, but not often. Therefore, the salvation of the farmer in the drouth-stricken sections is to secure as soon as possible old sound corn with strong germinating quality, and put it away for seed for next spring, taking care that it is not exposed to moisture or frost, or mice or vermin of any kind. By doing so he will go far to guarantee a good corn crop in 1914.

In the extreme north of the corn belt rains seem to have been abundant, but there is the danger of freezing. The probability is that this great drouth will break up in a violent manner; and it may be followed by storms and freezing that will catch this late corn. Therefore, we would advise our readers in the northern sections not to wait till October to select their seed corn, but to select it as soon as well dented, dry it out thoroughly, and keep it dry. The corn crop of 1914 will be largely determined by the care that farmers take of the seed corn of that year; and there is no time to lose in taking care of it, whether you buy it or select your own.
