PROLOGUE.

Lovers of Romance, attention! Here's a story you will like. It tells of mystery under the dreamy moon of the Pacific islands and of love in the shady lanes of New England—and what more can a story reader want? The mystery, of course, is introduced early in the tale, and the love follows close after. Together they go hand in hand through the pages of the story, never parting company until the final chapter. There the mystery departs, but the love remains.

You know, of course, about the author, Lloyd Osbourne. He learned how to write in a worthy school, for he is a stepson of Robert Louis Stevenson. And no greater story teller than the latter ever lived.

CHAPTER X.

General Mouse's View.

MATT gave an appalled glance about the room—at the pictures, the tapestries, the rich, dark, old furniture—at the elegance, luxury and beauty that everywhere surrounded him. "You couldn't," he exclaimed, overcome. "You don't understand what it is to be poor. You see it staged and dressed up, and with a row of footlights, and roses climbing over the cardboard cottage; but it isn't like that at all, Chris; it's ugly and detestable, and I should be the most selfish brute alive to let you do such a thing."

"It needn't be ugly and detestable, Matt," she returned, with a tender, reproving seriousness. "The trouble is that poor people are usually poorer still in taste, and are horribly ill-clothed, and given to chromos of Swiss lakes and screaming green carpets. We won't be that kind of poor, and if you fight about it any more I shall think it is because you really do not want me."

"Oh, Chris, it isn't that. God knows it isn't that. I—I am a man, and I—"

She drew her head to her bosom. "The mouse was some help after all," she murmured with a happy little laugh. "Lion thought he was at the jumping off place, but mouse caught his beautiful frightened tail just in time—though it took an awful big mouse pull to save him from going over—and now she is going to kiss him for being a stay at home work lion, and ready to fight the whole world rather than let her go."

"It's going to be a hard business, Chris."

"I know it—but you mustn't get discouraged."

"Anderson, the surveyor, might give me a job. I know something of that, you know—a great deal."

"Then there are the mills."

"All too skilled for me, I'm afraid and unloved."

"The telephone company?"

"Yes, I'll try them. The electric branch was very thorough at the academy. I could take a dynamo to pieces once, and what's more, put it together again and make it go."

"You see, you know lots more than you thought you did."

"And there is Beckles' bank. Beckles is such a funny old fellow, Chris; insatiable about the islands and specially about the girls. Has dreams of going out there, I fancy, and turning grand Turk, the fat old scallawag. When I said the prettiest women in the Pacific came from Manihiki and Uahine he carefully wrote down both names in a little book, with the most owlish expression you ever saw, right in the middle of stocks and bonds and mortgages."

"And Doty. Be sure and remember the Rev. Mr. Doty, Matt. He likes you awfully well, admires you and looks up to you tremendously."

"Oh, I'll manage somehow—some way. And then $75 a month and you."

"But try to save every penny of what you have, and I'll begin saving my allowance. I don't want to live at your horrid Mrs. Sattane's. We must have a little home all of our own."

"Well, that's a long way off. The important thing now is to land a pay envelope every Saturday night, isn't it?"

"Important? Oh, Matt, you just must!"

"And then you'll come—really come? Chris, I still can't believe it."

"You will when you've got $75 a month."

"I may not even reach that all at once. God knows, it may be hard to get $40."

"That will be a start, anyway, and if we do have to wait a little my allowance will be mounting up."

"We shan't wait if I can help it. I'll turn the old town upside down."

Oh, Chris, with you to work for what couldn't I do?"

Matt strode homeward in a state of indescribable joy, though with many a care running blackly through the bright wool of his hopes and raptures. He was pledged to a desperate plan and one that would bring down on him a universal reproach. Such a marriage would shake Manaswan to its foundations and unloose a torrent of gossip that would be harder to endure than poverty itself. Alternately he glomed over Chris' fortune—those "three snugs old houses"—and then inconsistently wished them to the devil. Matt was a proud man, and the thought of being misrepresented and misjudged was more than galling. What a humiliating figure he would cut before her father when the inevitable day of reckoning arrived! He would be seen as an adventurer preying on innocence and wealth. Yet ever before him was Chris herself, with upraised lips and quivering body and misty, haunting eyes, all her young womanhood his to take by the divinest of divine rights.

The boarders, assembled at supper, found him at first very backward and moody, while he found them altogether unendurable. There was a new boarder, a heavy, gray haired, deferential man with a gold tooth, who was ceremoniously presented.

"Two good fellows ought to know each other," said one of the boarders, taking it on himself to make the introduction. "Mr. Broughton—Mr. Bates." Matt politely expressed his gratification, and the two good fellows subsided into their respective seats. Mr. Bates, as it appeared later, was springing out the land for a shoe factory site and had been very much impressed by the possibilities of Manaswan—yes, sir, very much impressed. At this Matt waked up and cultivated Mr. Bates as a potential dispenser of jobs, grew very animated and friendly and was more than pleased to learn that Mr. Bates' company maintained the principle of the "open shop."

There was certainly a chance for a nonunion man, or a shadowy chance, anyhow, and Matt, with shoe factory possibilities dancing in his head, absorbed himself in the conquest of Mr. Bates. After supper, over a pipe and a cigar, he continued the good work, even broaching the subject tentatively and receiving encouragement.

With a feeling that he already had a bulldogish grip on the shoe business, Matt said good night and went up to his room, more than satisfied with his evening's work. As he lit a match, however, and touched it to the gas, he was confronted by a sight that drove all these reflections from his head. The mattress was tumbled and bare; the bureau drawers were open; the room had been searched in his absence, and the moment he recovered from his astonishment he knew by whom. They had been there, seeking a clew, a scrap of paper, anything that might put them on John Mort's track. Impelled by an unaccountable instinct he ran to the window and looked out. There below him under the street lamp were two men in close conversation. All at once they turned and gazed upward, revealing the faces of Mr. Bates and Mr. Kay, and then they passed on and were lost in the dim street.

The next morning Matt was scarcely surprised to learn that Bates had departed. The representative of the shoe company was no more—in any boarder sense—and all that remained of him was a two-dollar bill on his dresser, and Miss Gibbs' recollection of sundry creakings and tip-toes in the middle of the night. Yes, he had vanished, that quiet, deferential, gray haired person with the gold tooth, and with him also vanished Matt's job in the mythical shoe factory. The marveling boarders would have marveled more could they have known of Matt's devastated room, but this he kept to himself, and professed to be as much in the dark about Mr. Bates as any one else.

Afterward he sallied forth in his best clothes, and as spruce and well groomed as he could make himself, to seek work. The first place he tried was Mr. Beckles' bank, a small brick structure with plate glass windows and a red headed cashier in a cage. Mr. Beckles received Matt effusively in an inner office, proffered a chair, and seemed readier than ever to talk about south sea maidens, and the respective allurements of Manihiki and Uahine. The stout old dreamer was frankly and unpleasantly gross. Matt, though far from squeamish, was disagreeably affected. The atrocious hypocrisy of the old fellow jarred on him. He would have been wiser in his own interest had he pretended to a greater enthusiasm. Instead, he switched off to the subject of his job with a suddenness that made the great Turk crimson to the ears and assume an expression of detected guilt.

Matt left not only without a job but with the consciousness of an active ill will behind him. He was disquieted, too, to learn that in spite of his reiterated denials he was regarded as a rich man, and, if not actually a Kamaka king, had the reputation of owning vast and far away estates in the south Pacific. Mr. Beckles had been shocked—really shocked—and bitterly offended, too, at the truth. He would have parted easily with $1,000 to a swindler, but for the honest man in dire need of work he had nothing save a curt good day.

In Anderson's office Matt experienced a similar social tumble and a similar rejection. The engineer was at first incredulous and then downright rude, for he also had a shattered illusion. As Matt left, flushed with anger and in Anderson's eyes a convicted cheat, he perceived that he had a better chance with strangers than with those he deemed his friends. The telephone superintendent, to whom he applied next, had no acquaintance with him, and in consequence was quite civil. Courtesy was about all he had to offer, for the company was "full up" and had "men to burn." With this forceful colloquialism Matt was speeded on his way again to try for a spot where the fires of commerce burned less brightly.

Of course he could have gone to Ingersoll, but at that his pride drew the line. The old mulatto, considering himself deeply ill used, had shrunk into his shell and adopted a mien of frozen revocation. He had even ceased to look the other way when they met or assuming an abstracted expression in which there was not the slightest glint of recognition.

EMIL G. MEISINGER DIED AT THE PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL YESTERDAY

From Tuesday's Daily.

Yesterday at the Presbyterian hospital in Omaha, Emil G. Meisinger, a son of John Meisinger, residing some seven miles west of this city, died, after undergoing an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Meisinger was about 28 years of age, and was taken to Omaha a few days ago, suffering from an acute attack of appendicitis, and while he was operated upon it was without avail, and he gradually grew worse until his death came yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. His death will come as a great shock to his relatives and friends in this county, where he was very popular among a large circle of friends. Mr. Meisinger was a member of Evergreen Camp, Woodmen of the World, and members of that order will go to Omaha this afternoon to bring the body of their departed brother here for burial.

ST. MARYS GUILD BAZAR A BIG SUCCESS IN SPITE OF THE BAD WEATHER

From Saturday's Daily.

Despite the cold and rainy weather that prevailed all day yesterday the ladies of St. Mary's Guild, who are conducting a Christmas shop in the Hotel Riley block, did very well and realized a neat sum of money from the sale of many of the pretty and dainty articles prepared for the holiday season. Today the ladies are conducting a market for the sale of good things to eat, in connection with the shop, and have had much success. These ladies are hustlers and there is no doubt that they have a most attractive line of articles for sale at their shop.

Mrs. Chris Tschirren and daughter, Miss Emma, came in this morning from their farm home, near this city, and were passengers on the early Burlington train for Omaha, where they will spend the day.

Mrs. H. E. Beins of Creighton, Neb., and Mrs. J. H. Harvey of Chamberlain, S. D., who have been visiting at the home of J. A. Harvey for the past two weeks, departed this morning for their homes.

Frank Wheeler of Louisville came down this morning on No. 4 and visited here until the Schuyler train with his old friends in this city.

TIED UP BY FLOODS DOWN IN TEXAS

From Saturday's Daily.

A letter was received this morning from W. E. Rosenkrans, who, in company with J. E. McDaniell, George M. Bild, Henry Kaufmann, Grant Backenberg, John E. Kraeger, Louis Leiner and John Thomas, are on a tour through Texas, informing his Dallas, being caught between two washouts on either side of family that they are stranded at that place, and would be compelled to stay there for a whole day. The party will get out of Dallas, but will have to go clear to Houston in order to get them into San Antonio, and will then, if the conditions warrant, be able to proceed on to Brownville and McAllen and look over the land in the Rio Grande valley. After a short stay there the party will proceed to Falfurris and Jordan, Texas, and look over the land there. It is hardly necessary to say that the whole party is having a big time and are in excellent spirits, although they are delayed by the big flood.

SIXTY-ONE DEAD IN TEXAS FLOODS

Late Reports Tell of Heavy Loss of Life at Sunnyside.

CREST IS NEARING THE GULF.

Swell of Brazos River Is Approaching Counties Bordering on the Sea—Governor Colquhoun Appeals for Aid for the Sufferers.

Houston, Tex., Dec. 8.—Late dispatches increased the number of known dead in the Texas floods to sixty-one, with the possibility that a heavy death toll by drowning reported at Sunnyside, but not yet confirmed, would increase this number. The additional known deaths included four at Hungerford and a like number near Wellborn.

The crest of the Brazos river flood is nearing Brazoria county, which borders on the gulf, and the crest of the Colorado river flood is approaching Matagorda county, also on the gulf. Reports from Wellborn that twelve negroes and a Mexican had met death on the Allen plantation, at the junction of the Navasota and Brazos rivers, and that twenty-five negroes had been drowned on the Parker plantation, nearby, were not confirmed.

Governor Colquhoun issued an appeal to the people of Texas asking aid for the flood sufferers.

THREE SLAIN AT CALUMET

Two Strike Breakers and Boarding House Keeper Killed in Beds.

Calumet, Mich., Dec. 8.—Arthur and Harry James, brothers, and Thomas Daily were killed and Mary Nicholson was badly injured by rifle bullets fired before daylight into the apartment house in which they lived. The James brothers came here from Toronto and obtained employment in the Copper Range Consolidated, whose men are among those on a strike.

They took up their abode with Daily, who was both a miner and a boarding house keeper. Miss Nicholson is the daughter of William Nicholson, who occupied the other side of the apartment house in which Daily lived.

All of the victims were in bed when shot. Ten or twelve shots were fired. Six suspects are under arrest.

The murders aroused great indignation throughout the copper mine strike zone and his meetings of citizens were held at Houghton and Calumet. Both meetings adopted resolutions demanding that the sheriff use all means to rid the city of "murder inciting mercenaries."

The strikers also held meetings and speakers exhorted the men to stick to the Western Federation of Miners and to be prepared to defend their homes against raids from officers.

White House Bridal Couple in London. London, Dec. 8.—Mr. and Mrs. Francis Bowes Sayre arrived in London yesterday. They were met by the American ambassador and Miss Page and were driven to the ambassador's residence where they will stay while in London. Mr. and Mrs. Sayre, who are on their honeymoon, had a rough crossing.
