BODY OF MAN FOUND WASHED UP FROM THE RIVER ON SPECK'S ISLAND

Yesterday afternoon John Rainey, who is living on Speck's island, some three miles south of the Burlington bridge, discovered on the east shore of the island the body of a man washed up by the river, and securing the body so it could not float away he hastened to notify Sheriff Quinton of the gruesome find, and this morning that official, accompanied by Undertaker John P. Sattler, visited the island to secure the body.

It was found that the body was in a very bad state, having been in the river for some time, and it was almost impossible to make out any of the features, as the flesh was dropping off in places. The man wore what seemed to be a soldier's uniform or a hunting suit, of a tan color; black button shoes and leggings, which were also like those worn by the soldiers. The shoes were number 6½ in size. The man was 5 feet, 7 inches in height, and weighed, it is thought, about 140 or 150 pounds. There were no papers or other means of identification on the body, the only articles found being 13 cents and a small chip on the saloon of John Nillier, 3223 South 24th street.

The body was brought to this city by the sheriff and Mr. Sattler and will be buried in the cemetery here this afternoon. The authorities are very desirous that the news of the finding of the body and a description of the man be printed by the different papers of the state, and particularly in the towns along the river, where it might be possible the man had disappeared from.

George L. Meisinger of Cedar Creek was attending to some important business matters and visiting relatives and friends in this city today.
