NO POLITICS, HIGHER PAY AND UNFIT OUT

Keynote of State Teachers' Convention at Omaha.

Omaha, Nov. 5.—Down with politics, up with salaries, out with the physically unfit! That is a dominant cry at the annual convention of the Nebraska State Teachers' association.

The convention opened with a large attendance in the banquet hall of Hotel Remac. The main sessions of the convention are being held in the Auditorium. Sectional meetings are being held in the First Methodist and other nearby churches. There are thirty-two of these departmental gatherings in all. Superintendent C. M. Barr of Hastings struck what seems to be a keynote of sentiment at this convention, when, in his address, he declared against politics, for higher pay and the elimination by examination of the physically unfit teachers. Along this line he said:

"I know of my own absolute knowledge that many teachers stand all day before a class of thirty-five or more and go through the pretense of teaching when they are physically incompetent to teach. They ought to be eliminated, and the only way to do it is to secure the passage of a law requiring physical examination of school teachers. With the physically unfit eliminated an increase in pay would probably follow. I believe the state of Nebraska is wealthy enough to pay every teacher a living wage. The pay should extend through the year."

SOAPING A GEYSER.

Food That Roused the Fury of the Sleeping Wairoa.

Some of the arctic geysers in New Zealand will not play unless they are soaped; a process only occasionally at hand, as the much soaping Wairoa geyser is the only one in the territory. The Wairoa geyser, which is the only one of its kind in the world, is being present at the economy. The author states that the offending priest was a Maori known as Kathleen, who was clothed in a hat and completely covered with raka, rivi and pigeon feathers.

"The caretaker approached Kathleen with a big white soap in hand. It was half full of yellow soap out into small cubes. "Are you ready, Kathleen?" he asked. "Yes," she promptly answered. "Taking out two or three handfuls of soap, the caretaker threw them into Wairoa's deep throat and then handed the bag to Kathleen. Grasping the string handle at the bottom of the bag, she opened the mouth and out poured a spongy stream.

"Ten minutes passed, but there was only a slight increase in the volume of steam at Wairoa's mouth, and there were no subterranean signs of an imminent eruption. Fifteen, twenty minutes passed with very little change.

"When thirty minutes had gone there was a rumble, then a splash of water. The people near the geyser backed away. Two or three more splashes followed, and each was higher than its predecessor; then came a hoarse roar, a rush of steam, and up past a low sulphur dyed sinter wall flashed a column of water carrying up clouds of steam. Soap, just common washing soap, had conquered Wairoa and forced it from its lair. Up it continued to go—fifty, sixty, eighty, 120 feet.

"Wairoa would have come higher if it hadn't been for the wind," the caretaker told me. "It has been known to go 180 feet."

"While Wairoa played it played magnificently. In its shaft it rumbled. It dug its hot breath upon the venturine, and for more than 100 feet around it shook the ground until the earth trembled. For ten minutes it rose and fell. Then down it went. Like a thermometer on a frosty night until it was a mere splash."
