THE JOY MEETINGS CONTINUE WITH INTEREST

An Immense Audience, the Church Being Crowded to Utmost Capacity, With Many Parents Present.

From Wednesday's Daily.

The interest in the meetings of George Ellingwood Joy continues to grow, as was demonstrated last evening, when every available space in the First Methodist church, where the meetings are being held, was occupied by the young men and women, and the fathers and mothers of Plattsmouth who have heard the voice of this man with a mission, and those attending were amply repaid in the masterly handling of the "Boy Problem as We Face It" by Mr. Joy. The speaker shows his wonderful study of boy nature, and the clear-cut truthfulness of his statements cannot but be prolific of the greatest possible good, as it opens the eyes of the parents and young people to the only logical solution of the great moral questions that confront every individual in the world at some point in their life. The lectures are so arranged by Mr. Joy as to take up the different stages of development in the boy and youth, and last evening, in his address, the speaker dwelt on the period from 14 to 18, or the adolescent time of life when emerging from childhood the boy steps over the boundary into youth and dawning manhood, and when the great forces of nature, in their developing, make him truly a great vital question to be studied and handled. Mr. Joy, who seems to live and breathe a spirit of boyhood and to reach into the inner thoughts of the young man, gave as masterly description of this time of life as was possible to be given by anyone, and he left with his hearers, young and old alike, a better conception of the feeling of the boy in this time of life and a better inspiration to the parent in the handling of their boys in the home. As the speaker truthfully pointed out, in this time of life too often the growing boy is nagged at home over his appearance as he is springing up like a weed; his hours at home are filled with commands of not to do this or that, and at this time of life the boy is hardest to handle and the spirit of nagging has done more to drive boys away from home than any one cause, as down under the surface they feel keenly the ridicule heaped on their appearance and actions during the growing period, as well as an unexpressed longing for sympathy, companionship and love, although in their immature nature they feel abashed to express themselves, feeling that it is not manly to do so.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Joy traced back for the benefit of the parents the need of early impression upon the mind of the toddling child, the growing boy the purer, higher ideals and withal a respect and confidence with the parent that can come only from the perfect truthfulness of the father and mother with the boy. As he most truthfully said, nothing should ever be told or promised the boy in his tender years that was not given to him, be it reward for some act or punishment for some misdeed. He illustrated his remarks by several stories drawn from his actual experiences of the weakness of parents with their children in making statements of what the children might expect for their punishment for disobedience and then a failure to carry out the statement, which did a great injustice to both the parent and child, as it allowed the child to develop a feeling of lack of respect for the word of the parent and allowed them to continue a course of action that would do them a great deal of harm in their future.

In the course of his remarks Mr. Joy touched on the case which so often occurs of the father who is so busy with his business interests that he cannot devote a portion of his time to the life and interests of the boy, and thus allows a wall of lack of interest to grow up between these two persons who should be all in the world to each other, but their lives drift apart, the father engrossed in business and the boy finds in others advice and counsel which too often proves an injury to them, and when the awakening of the parent comes the mind of the child that should have been schooled in the ways of life from the lips of the parent, has gathered itself the knowledge of the world through channels which have left them stripped of the fine moral standard and high-mindedness that was just their heritage, but which had not been given to them. The speaker made a most earnest and forceful appeal to his hearers to carry with them a purpose to give to the youth in his tender years the advice and training that would bring them into a higher and truer conception of their responsibility in life to themselves and their fellow-man.

The work in the schools by Mr. Joy has proven even more successful than was hoped for and the time of this talented apostle of the boy and his needs was occupied yesterday from 9 o'clock in the morning until almost 8 o'clock in the evening with the boys, as some forty of them were with him at the hotel to gather inspiration from his words of advice and teachings.

The question of seating all who desire to hear the series of addresses has become a grave problem for the citizens' committee in charge of the meetings, as last evening the standing room in the church was at a premium and each night grows more and more crowded.
