TO THE POWERS THAT BE AT WASHINGTON

An Open Letter to W. J. Bryan and Senator G. M. Hitchcock, Bearing the Right Ring.

While we have never been a great admirer of Mr. R. L. Metcalfe, at present editor of the Omaha Nebraskan, yet we do endorse the following letter addressed by him to the powers that be at Washington, and hope the gentlemen to whom it is addressed will get together and relieve the anxiety of many democrats in Nebraska. The letter has the tone to it and is given in the spirit of harmony:

Omaha, Neb., January 26, 1915.
To Hon. William J. Bryan and
To Hon. Gilbert M. Hitchcock,
Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen:
You will find in the book stores of Washington a little volume entitled "Polyanna" and otherwise known as "The Glad Book." I beg leave to suggest that each of you secure a copy of this little volume and I am sure you will both be greatly interested in it. It is the story of a little girl, the daughter of a clergyman, who was left an orphan at an early day. She had been taught by her father to play "the glad game" under all circumstances. On one occasion she had been looking forward to the coming of the "missionary" box, which was a regular contribution of all sorts of things, by members of the church denomination to which her father belonged. She wanted very much to have a doll, and she was expecting that the next missionary box would contain this treasure.

While her father was opening the box, she stood on tiptoe, her little heart beating fast with the same expectancy which older hearts have had toward other of life's dreams. She was more than disappointed to find that instead of a doll the only novelty the missionary box contained was a pair of crutches.

Then it was her father turned to her and told her, "Now is the time to play the glad game."

"But what," asked the little girl, "can anyone find to be glad for over a pair of crutches?"

"That's easy," said her father, "you can be very glad that you do not have to use them."

The child was taught to play this game with respect to all the events of her life. When her father passed away, she went to another town and entered the home of a maiden aunt, who, having had disappointments of her own was sour and surly. It seemed her part in life to run up against all the grouches in the community, and sooner or later, she taught them one and all to play "the glad game," thus bringing happiness into their own lives and transforming the community's chaos into order.

"The glad game" is pretty hard to play in politics; but even in that heart-crushing and head-breaking domain, it may be played by those who undertake it in a big way—the game can be played only by big people.

The Nebraskan suggests that after you have read the little book to which it refers, you join with one another in playing "the glad game" in Nebraska. You have both been honored by the people of this state. The men of your party who have faithfully followed you when there were no offices to give out are glad of the honors each of you has won. They are just as anxious also that other and humble democrats in Nebraska shall be given honors, so far as concerns the federal offices in this state where the republican holders' terms have expired.

If you do not know that, on this score, the democrats of Nebraska are disappointed in both of you, then let this epistle of love be your eye-opener. The people of Nebraska understand that no great principle is involved in the trouble that prevents the filling of these Nebraska vacancies. They know that it is all the result of a personal quarrel. Out of that quarrel have grown hatreds among your Nebraska followers who would otherwise be living on terms of peace.

If you two men will get together and assist in filling these vacancies in the spirit of service to the public welfare and service to the party that has honored you, you will have done something that will mean much more than the mere giving of certain offices to certain men. You will have set an example to the democrats of your own state—an example which they will be very glad to follow. You will be serving formal notices upon all whom it may concern that you will both give encouragement to an effort for peace, and your action will

A Fresh and Complete Stock of Groceries!

I wish to impress upon the minds of all my friends and patrons that I have received and opened up a new fresh and complete line of groceries in the Gorder building, opposite my old stand on Main street, where I am ready and willing to supply the trade with any and everything in this line. I will conduct my business in this location awaiting the completion of the repairs on my former business place. I will be pleased to meet all my old friends and patrons, also all new ones who care to favor me with their patronage.

- L. B. EGENBERGER - be the means of reuniting many old-time friends who have been estranged by your quarrel. Your patronage quarrel has wounded the party pride of thousands of democrats, who do not want the offices themselves, but who dislike to be twitted with the charge that democrats have not men with sufficient ability to fill these offices.

Why not, then, play "the glad game" in Nebraska?

The Nebraska democracy is preparing to unite in solid phalanx behind Woodrow Wilson in 1916. You gentlemen are recognized as leaders in the state. If you are real leaders, then lead us not into the temptation to quarrel in Nebraska, as you are doing in Washington.

But lead us along lines where hatred and malice do not grow with political affiliation.

Lead us into that atmosphere where politics is the science of government rather than the art of hurling the biggest epithet.

Lead us as men with big purpose for accomplishment, rather than as angry boys bent upon tearing out one another's eyes.

Lead us into the "kingdom-of-never-grow-old," where only those are admitted who have learned to play "the glad game" in their intercourse with their fellows.

You will probably ignore this appeal; but should you act upon it you will be happier for it; and when the shadows of life begin to fall for both of you—when political quarrels are things of the past—the recollection of the "glad game" you played before a delighted Nebraska audience may bring up a kindly thought of your old comrade and would-be benefactor, "MET."

Number Get Bad Falls.

During the snowy and sleety weather of the last few days quite a number of our people have received rather severe falls on the icy walks, and among these was Joseph Fetzer, who, while coming along the walk on the west side of the court house yesterday morning, fell and bruised his left wrist and side quite painfully, although not seriously, it is thought. This walk has been in very dangerous shape, as it was practically one solid sheet of ice, but the warming weather has allowed the removal of the ice and it is now safe for travel.

Notice to Sons of Herman.

The Sons of Herman will give a social evening at the German Home on Saturday evening, February 6th, for the members of the Sons of Herman, their families and invited guests only. This will be a strictly private occasion, confined to the members, their families and guests. Let all the members be in attendance, as there will be a good time in store for all.

THE FINEST PRODUCTION OF THE THEATRE SEASON

"The Wizard of Wiseland," the Show That Pleases Thousands of People and Right Up-to-Date.

That delightful, farcical musical extravaganza, "The Wizard of Wiseland," which has been singing its merry and gladome way into the hearts of thousands of Chicago theatergoers during its long run there, will be seen here next Saturday night, February 6th, at the Parmele theatre. And it would be well to bear in mind that the mirthful wizard not only sings, but laughs his way into the good will and favor of his thousands of friends. Grouchiness, long faces, that tired feeling, the blues, disappointment and all other minnows that flesh is heir to, will disappear before the magic of his wand.

Through the two acts of the piece, it has been said repeatedly by critics, there is not a moment when eye or ear, mind or heart, is not held in happy thrall. A company of carefully selected singers and comedians will be seen in the cast, and a large and well trained chorus will grace the concerted passages, ensembles and lyrics. The startling transformations in keeping with the mythical character of that fabled spot, are included in the scenic embellishments of "The Isle of Wiseland."

Receiving Some Fine Corn.

The Journal office has two very fine ears of large white corn that was sent here to John Long by Earl Barr, the brother of Mrs. Long, who is at present located on a claim twenty miles south of Limon, in Elbert county, Colorado, in the heart of the dry farming country. He has been most successful in his dry farming and has a great many acres under cultivation. The friends of the young man here will be pleased to learn of his success in his western home. The corn sent back here is as fine as can be found anywhere, and it is hard to find an equal in this part of the country.

Assisting in Meat Market.

During the indisposition of L. W. Lorenz, of the firm of Lorenz Brothers, of this city, Mr. Carl Kunsman has been secured to assist in the shop, looking after the needs of the customers, and by his long experience in this line of work will be most valuable to the firm. Mr. Lorenz has been feeling quite poorly in the past two weeks and it will be some time before he is able to resume his active work in the shop.

Old Friend Badly Injured.

The many friends in this city of Moses Hiatt, who was for a number of years a resident of this place, will learn with the deepest regret of an accident that befell him at his home in Murray last Sunday morning. Mr. Hiatt started to walk out into the yard and neglected to put on his rubbers as he left the house, and as he stepped out of the door slipped and fell, injuring his shoulder quite badly and bruising his side considerably. He is quite well advanced in years and has not been in the best of health for the past few years, and as a result of the fall is reported as being in a most critical condition. It is to be hoped that this splendid old gentleman will recover from the accident and soon be able to be around, but the accident will lay him up at the best for quite a while.
