Hon. T. M. Marquette's family was bereaved last week of their dear child, a baby boy only 2 months old. This is the third son they have lost, and the parents feel the loss keenly indeed. The funeral took place at Lincoln on Wednesday last, and was attended by many Cass county neighbors and friends of Mr. Marquette in days gone by.

Warning for Boys—A young son of William Gilmour narrowly escaped serious injury Tuesday; he had, as boys often do, got on a passing wagon, and in attempting to get off at the side while the wagon was in motion, fell under the wheel, which ran over his body from hip to shoulder, fortunately no bones were broken, although the wagon was loaded; he is now said to be better. If the boys would take it as a lesson they would prevent many accidents.

In our last issue we spoke of an appearance of a grave on the hill near the Episcopal church. Thursday the body was exhumed by the marshal, Drs. Livingston, Schildknecht, McCook and Root, examined the remains, but could not exactly agree whether they were the bones of a man or woman. Old settlers know of a woman buried in 1850 and a man in 1854. The following letter gives, we think, a reliable account of the affair:

Greenwood, Neb., Editor Herald: Sir—I see by the Herald of the 21st that as a team was passing up the hill near E. B. Lewis' the wheels broke through the ground and a coffin was discovered. I know that there is a grave somewhere near that place. I was living on the east bank of the Missouri river in the years 1850-1851. In 1850 all or nearly all the emigration passed up the east side of the Platte river and a large number of them crossed the Missouri river at your place. In fact, all the Mormons crossed there. Now this grave of which I speak was made in 1850; a lady died of cholera and was buried there. My idea of it always has been that it was just in front of the place where Dr. Donelan lives, but I may be that much mistaken. I expect that I am the only one in the county that knows anything about it unless it may be that James O'Neill remembers it. The lady was going to California or Salt Lake, I have forgotten which.

Old Settler.

Rev. T. C. Setz of Nickerson, Neb., who has been here for some time visiting at the home of his brother, Eugene Setz, and who occupied the pulpit at the Christian church here, departed this morning for his home.
