Young Man Who Sojourned Here for Several Weeks Under Various Aliases Departs Quite Suddenly.

Some days ago the people of this city, or a large number of them, were rather surprised as well as shocked to learn that a young man who had been here for the past few months had taken flight and left in his rear many sufferers in a financial way from his stay here. While here the man went under the name of E. J. Browning in certain quarters, while among others, it is stated, he was known simply as Brown, while receiving his mail under another name here from Murray, where he had worked on a farm for a time, and dropped in there unexpectedly and gave out that he had been on the stage with a troupe that had gone busted.

After staying there for a time he came to Plattsmouth and was at once taken up quite extensively, as he possessed a very good voice and seemed most prepossessing to those whom he met, and was soon given an entree into the best circles. He secured employment at the Burlington shops in the brass foundry and seemed to be doing well, although rather dissatisfied with his work, apparently, as could be noticed from his conversation. He laid off at the shops Friday last, as he stated, but in reality it seems he quit, and Friday evening departed on the 7:45 train for Omaha, which was the last seen of him in this city.

As soon as the news of his departure leaked out there began a long list of those who had been handed a sting by Mr. Browning. Other reports have been extensively circulated in regard to his connection with several very peculiar matters, but this seems to lack any real foundation, beyond suspicious circumstances which might possibly mean connection with the young man. He was a man apparently from the south, as his dialect would indicate, being quite pronounced, and he was constantly complaining of the cold, stating that he had never been in a country where it was necessary to wear an overcoat. It may be that he has departed for a warmer climate, and at least he has been consigned there in the thoughts of many of those he left behind.

ROBERT PROBST WILL ERECT A NEW GARAGE IN PLATTSMOUTH SOON

The newest improvement projected in the building line for the coming year is that of the new garage of Robert L. Probst, which he has planned to put up at the corner of Vine and Seventh streets on the lots that for years have stood vacant there, and the new improvement will add greatly to the appearance of that part of the city. The building, as outlined by Mr. Probst, will be 88x140 feet and will be able to accommodate a large number of cars at one time. The building will be made as nearly fire-proof as possible in every way, with steel side walls, and in the construction of the building the greater part will be of concrete. These lots, which are quite desirable ones, were secured at a bargain by Mr. Probst, and when the new building is erected it will cover the entire plot of ground secured. It is thought that work will be commenced on the new building as soon as the weather moderates sufficiently to allow the work to be commenced, and will be pushed to completion as fast as possible in order to have it in running order by the summer months. The new owner of the lots feels that he will have a splendid building when it is completed and one that will be a credit to the city.

Ben Horning Doing Nicely.

The reports from Wise Memorial hospital in Omaha, where Ben Horning of this city is recovering from an operation to remove a growth from his cheek, state that he is getting along nicely and that the attending physicians are now quite hopeful that the operation will prove successful in every way and that he will be able to return home relieved of the malady from which he has suffered greatly in the past few months.

FIRST CASE IN POLICE COURT FOR MANY DAYS

Yesterday for the first time in almost two months the temple of justice, or rather, the police court section, presided over by Judge Archer, took on the appearance of life, as Charles Bates stood before his honor to plead guilty to a charge of disturbing the peace by attempting to make war on a stranger near the Hotel Riley, and his plans of warfare were nipped by the police and the cold, unfeeling walls of the jail soon closed Charles in from a world where he might engage in warfare with his fellow man. It seems that Bates had indulged in considerable intoxicants, and the man standing near the hotel was made the object of his wrath, although the man repeatedly told Bates to go away and leave him alone, as he did not want anything to do with him. This only added fuel to the flames of fiery wrath issuing from Charles, and he was on the warpath in great shape when the cold hand of the law cooled his wrath and he is now meditating from the recesses of the jail on the folly of making trouble. The judge, although almost out of practice from months of lack of police court business, handed out a little package labeled "$5 and." The man was taken back to the prison to rest until the fine and costs are paid.
