CHAPTER XXIII.

The Dance and Its Sequel. JERRY met Peg at the foot of the path when he saw all the lights disappear in the house. They walked across the lawns and meadows on that beautiful July night, with the moon shining down on them. Once at the great hall his mother put the gauche little Peg at her ease, introduced her to the most charming of partners and saw that everything was done to minister to her enjoyment. It was a wonderful night for Peg. She danced every dance, she had the supper one with Jerry, she laughed and sang and romped and was the center of all the attention. What might have appeared boldness in another with Peg was just her innocent, wilful, child-like nature. She made a wonderful impression that night and became a general favorite. She wanted to go on and on and never to stop. When the last waltz was played and encores and the hall was really ended Peg felt a pang of regret such as she had not felt for a long, long time. "Oh, I am so happy, so happy!" she cried as Jerry led her back to her seat at the conclusion of the last dance. "I wish I could make the world one great ballroom for you," said Jerry earnestly. "Do ye?" asked Peg tremulously. "I do."

self at all. Ye might have it ye'd gone with him. Why, that's the kind of man that tires of ye in an hour an' leaves ye to sorrow alone. Faith, he'd 'what'd he do to me if I'd let him." "What? To you?" cried Ethel in astonishment. "Yes, to me—here in this room to-day. If ye hadn't come in when ye did I'd ha' taught him a lesson he'd na' carried to his grave, so I would!" "He tried to make love to you?" repeated Ethel incredulously, though a chill came at her heart as she half realized the truth of Peg's accusation. "Ever since I've been in this house," replied Peg. "An' today he comes to ward me with his arms stretched out. 'Kiss an' be friends,' sez he, an' in you walked."

CHAPTER XXIV.

Enemies No Longer. ETHEL sank down into a chair and covered her eyes. "The wretch!" she wailed. "The wretch!" "That's what he is," said Peg. "An' ye'd give yer life into his kapin' to blacken so that no decent man or woman would ever look at ye or speak to ye again." "No! That is over! That is over! I hate myself! Ethel cried between her sobs. "Oh, how I hate myself!" "Ethel! Ethel! Don't do that! Darlin', don't! It's not worth it. Kope yer life an' yer heart come until the one man in all the world comes to ye with his heart pure, too, an' then ye'll know what rish happiness means." She knelt down beside the sobbing girl and took Ethel in her arms and tried to comfort her. She helped her cousin up and supported her. Ethel was on the point of fainting, and her body was trembling with the convulsive force of her half-suppressed sobs. "Come to ye room," said Peg in a whisper as she helped Ethel over to the stairs. "I'll watch by yer side till mornin'. Lane on me. That's right. Put yer weight on me." She picked up the traveling bag, and together the two girls began to ascend the stairs. Ethel gave a low choking moan. "Don't, dear, ye'll wake up the house," cried Peg anxiously. "We've only a little way to go. Any now. Not a sound! Ssh, dear! Not a morsel of noise!" Just as the two girls reached the landing Peg in her anxiety stepped short, missed the top step, lost her footing and fell the entire length of the staircase into the room, smashing a tall china flower vase that was resting on the post at the foot of the stairs. The worst thing that could possibly have happened was just what did happen. Peg instantly made up her mind that they were not going to know why Ethel was there. Ethel must be saved and at any cost. "Holy mother!" she cried. "The whole house'll be awake! Give me yer hand!"

Peg Fell the Entire Length of the Staircase.

hat! Quick! An' yer cloak, an' yer bag! Peg began quickly to put on Ethel's hat and cloak. Her own she flung out of sight beneath the great oak table. "Now remember," she dictated, "Ye came here because ye heard me. Ye weren't goin' out of the house at all. Ye just heard me movin' about in here. Stick to that!" The sound of voices in the distance broke in on them. "They're comin'," said Peg anxiously. "Take care, mither—keep back. Let me deal with them. And Alaric, with an electric flashlight, appeared at the head of the stairs, followed by his mother and the servant Jarvis. He began a systematic search of the room until suddenly the reflector from the flashlight shone full on the two girls. Ethel was sitting back fainting in a chair, clinging to Peg, who was standing beside her trembling. "Ethel!" cried Alaric in amazement. "Margaret!" said Mrs. Chichester in anger. "Well, I mean to say," ejaculated the astounded young man as he walked across to the switch and doaded the room with light. "What does this mean?" asked Mrs. Chichester severely. "Sure Ethel heard me here," answered Peg. "an' she came in, an'—" "What were you doing here?" "I was goin' out, an' Ethel heard me, an' came in an' stopped me, an'—"

"Where were you going?" persisted the old lady. "Just out—out there," and Peg pointed to the open windows. Mrs. Chichester had been examining Peg minutely. She suddenly exclaimed: "Why, that is Ethel's coat!" "Sure it is," replied Peg, "an' this is her hat I've got, an' here's her bag." Peg was striving her utmost to divert Mrs. Chichester's attention from Ethel, who was in so tense and nervous a condition that it seemed as if she might faint at any moment. She thrust the dressing bag into the old lady's hand. Mrs. Chichester opened it immediately and found just inside it Ethel's jewel box. She took it out and held it up accusingly before Peg's eyes. "Her jewel box! Where did you get this?" "I took it," said Peg promptly. Mrs. Chichester opened the box. It was full. Every jewel that Ethel owned was in it. "Her jewels—Ethel's jewels!" "Yes, I took them too!" "You were stealing them?" "No, I wasn't stealin' them. I just took 'em. I wanted to wear them," answered Peg readily. Suddenly Peg saw a way of escape, and she jumped quickly at it. "I wanted to wear them at the dance."

"What dance?" demanded Mrs. Chichester. "Over there—in the Assembly rooms—tonight. I went over there, an' I danced, an' when I came back I made a noise, an' Ethel heard me, an' she threw on some clothes, an' she came in here to see who it was, an' it was me, an' we were both goin' up to bed when I slipped an' fell down the stairs, an' some heavy thing fell down with me, an' that's all." Alaric called out from the window: "There's some one prowling in the garden. He's on the path. He's coming here. Don't be frightened."

"Good heavens, Jerry!" he ejaculated, completely astonished. "I say, you know," he went on, "what is happening in this house tonight?" Jerry came straight down to Mrs. Chichester. "I saw your lights go up, and I came here on the run. I guessed something like this had happened. Don't be hard on your niece, Mrs. Chichester. The whole thing was entirely my fault. I asked her to go." Mrs. Chichester looked at him stonily. "You took my niece to a dance in spite of my absolute refusal to allow her to go?" "He had nothin' to do with it," said Peg. "I took him to that dance." Mrs. Chichester looked steadily at Jerry for a few moments before she spoke. When she did speak her voice was cold and hard and accusatory. "Surely Sir Gerald Adair knows better than to take a girl of eighteen to a public ball without her relations' sanction?"

"I thought only of the pleasure it would give her," he answered. "Please accept my sincerest apologies." Peg looked at him in wonder. "Sir Gerald Adair! Are you Sir Gerald Adair?" "Yes, Peg." "So ye have a title, have ye?" Peg felt somehow that she had been cheated. Why had he not told her? Why did he let her play and romp and joke and banter with him as though they had been children and equals? "I am ashamed of you! You have disgraced us all!" cried Mrs. Chichester at Peg. "Have I?" screamed Peg fiercely. "I've disgraced ye, have I? Well, none of you can tell me the truth. I'm goin' back to me father."

"Go back to your father, and glad we are to be rid of you!" Before Peg could say anything further, Ethel suddenly rose unsteadily and crossed the room. "Wait, mother! She mustn't go. We have all been grossly unfair to her. It is I should go. Tonight she saved me from—she saved me from— Suddenly Ethel reached the breaking point. She slipped from Peg's arms to the chair and on to the floor and lay quite still. Peg knelt down beside her: "She's fainted. Give her air!" Peg loosened Ethel's dress and talked to her all the while, and Jerry and Alaric hurried out in different directions in quest of restoratives. Mrs. Chichester came toward Ethel, thoroughly alarmed and upset. But Peg would not let her touch the insensible girl. "Go away from her!" cried Peg hysterically. "What good do ye think ye can do her? What do you know about her? You don't know anything about yer children. Ye don't know how to raise them. Ye don't know a thought in yer child's mind. Why don't ye sit down beside her sometimes an' find out what she thinks an' who she sees? Take her hand in yer own an' get her to open her soul to ye! Be a mother to her! A lot ye know about motherhood! I want to tell ye me father knows more about motherhood than any man in the world!" Poor Mrs. Chichester fell back, crushed and humiliated from Peg's onslaught. In a few moments the two men returned with water and salts. After while Ethel opened her eyes and looked up at Peg. Peg, fearful lest she should begin to accuse herself again, helped her up the stairs to her own room and there she sat beside the unstrung, hysterical girl until she slept. Her hand locked in both of Peg's. One thing Peg had resolved—she would not spend another night in the Chichester home. Her little heart was bruised and sore. The night had begun so happily; it had ended so wretchedly.

And to think the one person in whom she trusted had been just amusing himself with her, leading her to believe he was a farmer—less than that he had once said, and all the time he was a man of breeding and of birth and title. Poor Peg felt so humiliated that she made up her mind she would never see him again. In the morning she would go back to the one real affection of her life—to the man who never hurt or disappointed her—her father.

'I was goin' out and Ethel stopped me,' said Peg.

We will now leave Peg for awhile and return to one who claimed so much of the reader's attention in the early pages of his history—O'Connell. It had not been a happy month for him.

He felt the separation from Peg keenly. At first he was almost inconsolable. The days passed slowly until Peg's first letter came. It contained the news of Kingsnorth's death—Peg's entrance into the Chichester family, her discontent, her longing to be back once more in New York. This was followed by more letters, all more or less in the same key. Finally he wrote urging her to give it all up and come back to him. He would not have his little daughter tortured for all the advantages those people could give her. Then her letters took on a different aspect. They contained a curious half note of happiness in them. No more mention of returning. On the contrary, Peg appeared to be making the best of the conditions in which she was placed. These latter letters set O'Connell wondering. Had the great message of life come to his little Peg?

Although he always felt it would come some day, now that it seemed almost a very real possibility he dreaded it. There were so few natures would understand her. That Peg was developing her character and her nature during those few weeks was clear to O'Connell. The whole tone of her letters had changed. But no word of hers gave him any clue to the real state of her feelings until one day he received a letter almost entirely composed of descriptions of the appearance, mode of speech, method of thought and expression of one Jerry. The description of the man appealed to him, he apparently having so many things in common with the mysterious person who had so vividly impressed himself on Peg. Apparently Jerry was half trying to improve her self. There was a distinct note of seriousness about the last letter. He lived entirely alone in the same rooms he had with Peg when she was mentioned abroad. He was preparing, in his spare time a history of the Irish movement from twenty years before down to the present day. It was fascinating work for him, and he was naturally very interested in it. He was naturally very interested in it. He was naturally very interested in it.

Perfectly Safe at Weeping Water.

Hearing of the epidemic at Weeping Water, I called up Dr. Butler to learn what it is. He has assured me that it is chickenpox, that the epidemic has almost entirely subsided and that those who have the disease are isolated. He informed me that there was perfect safety in holding the Eighth Grade exercises there Friday, June 11th. Eda Marquardt, County Superintendent.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE MIDWEST AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, that we, W. M. Shales and J. C. Petersen, Jr., do associate ourselves together for the purpose of forming and becoming a corporation in the state of Nebraska, for the purpose of transacting with the state of Nebraska, and within any one of the states of the United States of America, the business hereinafter described. First.—The name of the corporation to be known as the MIDWEST AMUSEMENT COMPANY. Second.—The principal office and place of business of the Company shall be located in the City of Plattsmouth, in the County of Cass and State of Nebraska, but the Company may create and locate subordinate offices for the transaction of its business in any and all of the states where it is authorized to transact business.

Third.—The nature of the business to be transacted by said corporation shall be to purchase, lease, own, operate, manage and conduct picture show enterprises, including the purchase, lease, own and operation of such enterprises, real estate and buildings for the carrying on and operating such enterprises, and to do all other things that may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this corporation in any and all of the states where the Company has a right to transact its business. Fourth.—The authorized capital stock of the Company shall be twenty thousand ($20,000) dollars, divided into two hundred shares of the par value of one hundred (100) dollars each, and shall be non-assessable. The persons whose names are hereafter subscribed are shareholders and the number of shares respectively owned by each is set opposite to his name.

Fifth.—The Midwest Amusement Company shall commence its existence on the first day of March, A. D. 1915, and continue during a period of ten years. Sixth.—The business affairs, stock, property and concerns of the Company shall be managed by a Board of Directors composed of not less than two nor more than five members, all of whom shall be stockholders. Seventh.—The stockholders shall have power, from time to time, to make practical changes in the laws and regulations of the Company, or to amend or repeal any of the laws or regulations of the Company. The Board of Directors shall consist of two members, and shall be elected by the stockholders in the manner provided by the by-laws. Not less than five of the stockholders shall constitute a quorum.

Tenth.—The Board of Directors may be increased or decreased to not less than two nor more than five members by a vote of the stockholders at such time and in such manner as the by-laws may prescribe. Eleventh.—The Board of Directors have power to lease, sell, transfer and convey real estate, franchises or property belonging to the Company, for such consideration and subject to such conditions as the Board of Directors may determine to be for the best interests of the Company, and the statutes of any state where the Company may be authorized to transact business. The Board of Directors may from time to time borrow money and give notes and other evidences of indebtedness, and may from time to time provide for giving security for such indebtedness if desired and deemed expedient, in such manner as the Board of Directors may determine. No event shall said Company incur indebtedness in any greater amount than the amount of the aggregate of its capital stock, provided, however, that the power conferred by these articles shall not be limited by the amount of the aggregate of its capital stock, except by a vote of a majority of the whole number of directors. Twelfth.—The officers of said corporation shall be a President, a Vice-President and a Secretary-Treasurer. The officers herein named may hold any office or offices at the same time, and shall be chosen by the Board of Directors and shall hold their office until their successors are elected and qualified.

Thirteenth.—The Board of Directors shall be elected by the stockholders of the Company at their regular annual meeting and in the manner provided in the by-laws of the Company. The method of conducting the business of the corporation shall be as provided in the by-laws adopted by the stockholders. Fourteenth.—The highest amount of indebtedness to which said Company shall at any time subject itself shall not be more than two-thirds of the aggregate of its capital stock. We, the undersigned, hereby agree to take and pay for the number of shares of capital stock of the Midwest Amusement Company which are below set opposite to our names, respectively, subject to the provisions of these articles of incorporation.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, We have hereunto set our hands this 8th day of February, A. D. 1915. W. M. Shales, Plattsmouth, Neb. 50 J. C. Petersen, Jr., Plattsmouth, Neb. 50
