Donna and attempts to force his attention upon her. She is shielded by Hennage and then by McGraw. Hennage, in searching for the lost claim, runs across the canteen that belonged to Corblay and learns of Carey's guilt. About this time Carey shows up in San Pasquel in search of Bob McGraw, being anxious to buy the rights which McGraw has filed. A hold-up has been committed and the evidence points to young McGraw. Carey discovers where McGraw is located and attempts to use his information to force the young man to sell. Hennage, returning with the story of Corblay's death and the canteen, meets Carey, and by means of the Indian proves that Carey is the man who killed Corblay years before. Hennage forces restitution to the child, Donna. Later the Indian kills Carey. Hennage meets death in a spectacular gun duel with O'Rourke, whom he had previously told to get out of town for his insult to Donna.

GREAT PLAY AT THE GEM TUESDAY EVE, DECEMBER 21

Tuesday, December 21st, both matinee and night, there will be presented at the Gem theater the spectacular drama of the western mining country, "The Long Chance," with Frank Keenan, the eminent American character actor, in the leading role. The story of the play in brief is as follows:

Harley resents Corblay's intrusion, and tells him to get out of town; but when he learns of Marie's love for Corblay, he relents and leaves himself.

He buys the Silver Dollar Retreat in San Pasquel and in time comes to be known as the worst man in town.

Marie's husband meanwhile has gone out into the desert accompanied by his faithful Indian and Carey, a tenderfoot from Boston. Carey shoots Corblay from behind and escapes with the burros and the gold which they discovered. Carey dies in the desert, leaving a note in his canteen and an inscription on a sand stone ledge, reading, "Stranger, look in my canteen and see that I get justice."

Later, Hennage, learning of Marie's poverty and the arrival of a child, arranges to have Marie come to San Pasquel, where he secures her a position as cashier in the eating house.

Eighteen years elapse. Hennage has attached himself like a father to the now grown child, Donna. Marie falls ill and dies, leaving Hennage the map of her husband's claim. Borax O'Rourke is infatuated with
