AMES L TARP one Sunday morning drove out to Trumbley's. Mrs. Trumbley had been in the store the day before, and as he with his own hands cut off and wrapped up the few yards of calico she had bought she had chided him for not coming out to see them as often as had been his habit. He had pleaded overwork as the reason he had not visited them, so she had reminded him that Sunday was a good day for town people to come to the country and ended by inviting him to dinner the next day. She had not told Mary of this at once, for she feared her daughter's
