REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION AT LINCOLN

No Prohibition Endorsement, But Straddle on Railroad Control for Primary Change.

Lincoln, Neb., July 25.—The Rose-water allies, aided and abetted by the torrid weather and the inability of Chairman E. R. Gurney to find the end of his speech, wore all the fight out of the republican state convention here today.

Ex-Governor Aldrich, who in the cool of the morning had said that not a republican could be elected in Nebraska unless the convention repudiate the national platform declaration for exclusive federal control of railroad rates, grew calm and docile under the heat of the sun and the Gurney's hour and forty minutes speech. E. L. King of Osceola, who had said that Nebraska republicans should never indorse so repugnant a principle, grew quiet and peaceful under the insistence of party leaders that Nebraska could expect no help from the national ticket or committee if it snatched the national platform in the face.

And so, working together, the standpatters, the heat and the length of Gurney's speech controlled the convention. By the time the platform was reported at 5:15 p. m., only about 60 per cent of the delegates were in the hall to approve the draft, their principal business. They did it perfunctorily and unanimously, without cheers or enthusiasm. Then they adjourned.

Many Straddlers.

The platform committee had not delayed in vain. Out of its long deliberations had come a platform which must excite admiration by its innocuousness. It indorsed the primary as a principle, but declared the need of amendments to remedy glaring imperfections.

It spoke naught of prohibition, despite the overwhelming dry sentiment of delegates, but it pledged its candidates to enforce by statute and executive act any constitutional amendments the people may adopt, on any subject whatsoever.

It approved the entire national platform, including the troublesome railroad plank, and then qualified this by a paragraph which appears to mean that the original indorsement is to be taken with a grain of salt or not, just as individual republicans may find expedient under varying conditions.
