RENEWED TESTIMONY

No one in Plattsmouth who suffers backaches, headaches, or distressing urinary ills can afford to ignore this Plattsmouth man's twice-told story. It is confirmed testimony that no Plattsmouth resident can doubt.

C. L. Bates, farmer, Ninth and Walnut streets, Plattsmouth, says: "Kidney complaint seemed to come over me all of a sudden. I attributed the trouble to a heavy cold which settled on my kidneys and made them weak, causing the secretions to pass too frequently. I suffered considerably from pain across the small of my back. To stoop or stand erect sent sharp twinges darting through my loins. I was languid and had but little ambition. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured from Edward Rynott & Co.'s drug store, soon greatly benefited me and two boxes made a permanent cure." (Statement given April 9, 1912.)

On February 22, 1916, Mr. Bates said: "My opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills is just the same today as it was when I gave my first recommendation. I have never had Doan's Kidney Pills fail to do me good whenever my kidneys have caused me trouble."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Bates has twice publicly recommended and found the drill and reamers at Buffalo, N. Y.

Thomas' Poultry Remedy will help your hens to moult, causing them to shed earlier and be ready to lay when eggs are highest in the winter. If this remedy does not make good, we will.

PIERRE DUFRENE IS MADE VICTIM OF CRUEL JEST

"The Pawn of Fate" Reveals the Peasant-Painter of Paris as the Dupe of Rich Parisians.

In securing George Behan for the stellar role in "The Pawn of Fate" the World Film company has found one of their greatest successes and the brilliant master of characterization certainly has won great approval wherever he has appeared in these pictures. "The Pawn of Fate" will be shown at the Air Dome on Tuesday August 22nd. The story of the play is as follows:

Pierre Dufrene and wife Marcine live contentedly on their picturesque farm in Normandy, France. They know nothing of the gayer, broader life in the world beyond their rich meadows and green hillsides.

With Pierre's old father to aid them they pursue their simple rural lives, as wholesome and happy a young couple as could be found in the province. Pierre tends his sheep and Marcine fulfills all the duties of the housewife, occasionally coming down into the fields to see her husband and plague him with some simple childish trick.

While romping through the meadows, Marcine stumbles upon Lesar, a young painter from Paris, who is sketching at his easel. Pierre, in pursuit of his wife, finds her and Lesar picking up the scattered paraphernalia with which she had collided.

This is the beginning of the romance. Lesar, who is a wealthy Parisian and dabbles in art on the side, is attracted by Pierre's pretty wife. He returns to Paris for a few days leaving his painting materials in Pierre's keeping.

Pierre, who has become deeply interested in watching Lesar at work, conceives the idea that he too can paint. With Marcine as his model he daubs upon one of Lesar's canvasses a crude portrait, which, to the simple, untrained ideas of Marcine and Pierre's old father, appear as a marvelous work of art.

Lesar returns to find the little family imbued with the idea that Pierre is a potential genius. The unscrupulous young Parisian sees the humor of the thing and also a chance to make Pierre's artistic ambition the means to a successful culmination of his interest in Marcine.

The young painter from Paris declares his unbounded admiration for Pierre's first work of art and assures him that he has only to come to Paris to make the sensation of the century in artistic circles. He induces Pierre and Marcine to come to the city as his guests.

Pierre and Marcine are established in luxurious quarters and Pierre enthusiastically begins what he hopes will be a picture that will make him famous. While Pierre labors at his canvass, Lesar pays insidious suit to Marcine, who slowly but surely finds herself drifting under the spell of the young Parisian's charms and the brilliancy of the gay Parisian life, of which Lesar is giving her her first wonderful glimpse.

At last Pierre's great picture is finished and Lesar arranges, as the climax of his joke, to unveil the canvass at a party to which he invites all of the wits and gay revellers of his Parisian circle.

Lesar works the hoax to its climax with malicious cruelty. Suspecting nothing, Pierre is led to the veiled painting and proudly draws aside the draperies disclosing his crude and ridiculous attempt to paint a rural landscape. The peals of laughter and satirical comment come as a terrific shock to the poor peasant painter, and he undergoes all the tortures of bitter disillusionment.

To add to Pierre's fury when he discovers that he has been the butt of a ghastly joke, comes a seemingly well-founded suspicion that his wife Marcine has been an unfaithful to him as his supposed friend, Lesar. With the rage of a maddened bull, Pierre springs upon Lesar and a terrific fight ensues, ending with Pierre the victor and Lesar apparently in a dying condition.

Pierre rushes forth and staggers through the streets of Paris in despair. He attempts to bolster up his courage with absinthe and is about to end it all by leaping into the Seine, when arrested and taken back to Lesar's apartment.

Although desperately wounded, Lesar, conscience-stricken by the result of his scheme, confesses to Pierre that his alone, is the guilt and forces Pierre to believe in Marcine's innocence. In a scene of powerful pathos and deep heart interest, comes the reconciliation between Pierre and Marcine in their old homestead in the heart of Normandy.
