"I'll Tell Her You're a Baptist." the table the following morn- mills would be perhaps prohibitive ing. His moody silence puzzled even Sarah Hunter. But when the latter, whose Sunday schedule no storm could alter, came home from church and found Caleb and the boy immersed in a mass of files and ed to dry her thorough disapproval | tracks and yank it out by steam?" loosed the boy's tongue. She stood in the doorway surveying with a frown their preoccupied industry.

"It seems to me, Cal." she commented, "that even if you haven't any regard for the Sabbath you might do better than lead those younger than yourself into doing things which might better be left for days which were meant for such things.

She swished upstairs before Caleb had a chance to answer. But after she had gone Steve looked up from a line he was spooling.

"She ain't particularly pleased, I take it," he remarked.

"Not particularly," Caleb chuckled, "It's funny, too, because I do most of this sort of work on Sunday. You'd think she'd become resigned to it, but she doesn't."

The boy thought deeply for awhile. "Didn't-didn't the 'postles cast their nets on Sunday?" he asked presently. Up shot Caleb's head.

"Huh-h-h?" he gasped. "I sed didn't the 'postles cast their lets on Sunday?" Steve repeated. "Seems to me they did, but I can't just rec'lict now what chapter it was in.

Caleb pulled his face into a semblance of sobriety.

"Seems to me they did," he agreed a little weakly, "now that you mention it. I don't just recollect where it occurred, either, at the moment, but we'll have to look it up, because as a case of precedent it'll be a clincher for Sarah."

Allison joined them Monday morning at daybreak. All day they drove through the seeping rain-drove north in Caleb's buckboard, to turn off final- | sibilities are limitless!" ly upon a woods trail that ran into the east along the lesser branch of the river. During the ride Steve's bearing toward the third member of the party was too plain to escape notice, for he never looked at nor directed a word to Allison ur' is it was in reply to a diwere almo, monosyllabic. But Allison, who, as usual, gave his undivided attention to the country through which they were passing, in attitude toward the boy was even more remarkable. Once when they had halted at noon he pointed out a billside of pine, black beneath the rain, close clustered and of mastlike straightness.

"There's a wonderful stand of pine, Cal," he remarked. "I'd venture to say that it would cut at least 2,000,000 Instantly, although the remark was addressed to him, Caleb knew that it was Stephen's comment for which Allison was angling, and hard upon his casual statement the boy's head came sharply around. "She'll run nigh double that," he swallowed the bait. "She'll run double and mebby a trifle more." Nor did Allison even smile now.

"What makes you think so?" he asked.

Again there came the boy's pat an-

"I ain't thinkin'," he said. "It's jest there. They're close set, them trees, and they're clear, clean to the tops. There ain't a stump there that won't run near ten standard."

Allison squinted and finally nodded

"Maybe," he agreed; "maybe." But later Caleb saw him enter some figures in his small, black bound note-

Then he seemed to remember that it was just a bit of a woods waif who had spoken. But Caleb, who was lazy brained in some matters, sensed that Steve had put into words Allison's own unspoken thought, just as Allison at that moment voiced the question which he was about to utter

"I suppose it was this-this Old Tom who taught you all these things you know about timber?" he said, curious. Steve pondered the question.

"Wal-I-I, yes," he answered at last. "Old Tom learned me some, but-but most of it I kind of feel as if I always

The boy was fast asleep, curled up beneath the blankets, when Caleb finaly broached that night the matter which had kept him awake the entire fall?" night before. And when he had finished Allison sat quiet for a long time before he offered any reply.

"You mean"- he began at length. "I just mean that I'm going to give him his chance," Caleb cut in. His voice was hushed, but vehement. "Why, man, think what he has this as a diamond, absolutely fresh, absolutely unspoiled or fagged with the inference of that moment of silence. nonsensical folderol which makes up the bulk of the usual boy's education later," he made haste to forestall any of his age, and a working knowledge, for instance, of this north country which most men envy! "In ten years, with a technical knowed it was a-comin'-this chanceeducation to back up his practical knowledge, he might prove priceless to some one who had need of such a specialist, always assuming, of course, and then his answers | that he developed according to promise. But the possibilities are limitless, too, in the other directions, aren't folks a-raound the house under foot."

"Meaning?" invited Caleb.

"Well, you don't know any too much concerning his antecedents, do you?" Allison suggested. "And still"-

"I don't have to," Caleb interrupted.

"not after one look at him." -"and still if you catch a boy young enough," Allison finished serenely "you can make a fairly presentable gentleman out of almost any material. with time enough and money enough to teach him what to do."

"You can," Caleb came back, "but, no matter how much money you spend, you can't make the sort of a gentleman out of him that knows without being taught what not to do! Theythey have to be born to that, Dexter.'

And there they let it drop. But the next morning when they were alone upon the brook Caleb, after several false starts, managed to reopen the subject with the boy himself.

"Has it ever occurred to you. Steve," he asked, "that all these things you know about the woods might be valuable some day to-to men who pay well for such knowledge?"

Steve paid no apparent heed to the! question until he had landed a trout which he had hooked a moment before. It was a heavy fish, and Caleb had promised to teach him how to handle that fly rod. Then he looked up.
