AS A CANDIDATE

He promises now, as when he ran for judge in Omaha, to work reforms. He weeps for the pioneers now, but denied their appeals for food and seed in the dark days of drouth and famine.

SAYS REAVIS CLAIMS CREDIT WHERE CREDIT IS NOT DUE TO HIM

Under the heading of "Another Reavis Deception," the democratic congressional committee of the First district has given out the following:

"In a campaign circular issued by the republican congressional committee, Mr. Reavis claims the credit of writing a law which does not exist. Here is the statement:

"Wrote the law which, after January 1, will give rural mail service to all farmers at their door wherever practical, and in no case further than one-half mile from the home."

"Mr. Reavis is either ignorant of what legislation was actually passed on this matter, or he has deliberately attempted to take credit, which belongs to another and thereby to mislead the farmers of his district.

"In the first place there is no such law as he describes and we challenge his claim.

"In the next place the only legislation passed on the subject is known as the "Hardwick amendment" providing for reclassification of rural mail routes and this amendment is now part of the postoffice appropriation law approved July 28, 1916.

"Senator Hardwick of Georgia was the author of and is entitled to the credit for this provision of law and not Mr. Reavis.

"While raising the issue of sectionalism Mr. Reavis does not hesitate to appropriate to himself the credit for a provision of law with which he had nothing to do. A southern senator in this case was the author of the provision which Mr. Reavis thought good enough to claim for himself. For campaign purposes he thought it fine stuff to pawn off on the farmers. The deception involved did not seem to disturb the congressman."
