

When I'll Come Back to You

By Larry Evans

CHAPTER XXIII. In Real Life Too.

HERE was no longer any objection raised by Miss Sarah, and Barbara spent every hour of her days with him.

It grew warmer with aging spring, and almost immediately he was able to sit with her and watch the stream of logs coming in over the line from Thirty Mile and beyond.

Miriam and Garry were married in that week which followed directly Steve's first days of convalescence.

Steve and Barbara were at the window together, Steve outwardly still a little pale and haggard, but for the rest his old serene self again.

"It certainly has not strengthened my vanity a little bit, either," said he, "to learn how smoothly things can move along without me."

Day by day the girl was finding her way deeper into that innermost heart of him which he had never shared with other woman or man.

It was a trick of speech that she had learned from him, but his employment of parallel, lazily amiable for the most part, had never been so hotly partisan as was hers at that moment.

And suddenly self-conscious, suddenly confused and warmly disconcerted at the quality of his gaze, she had to hide her head. But she hid it upon a shoulder most conveniently at hand.

Spring gave way to early summer, and now Steve was able to be on his feet again, so absently uncertain of balance at first, however, that she ridiculed him unmercifully one moment, only to rush to him in a panic of solitude the next.

There came long walks and longer trips in the saddle; came hours of silence that were the more wonderful for want of words—hours in which, in a hushed voice, she gave him shyly of her plans. But always, too, the interruptions grew more and more frequent and insistent.

Fat Joe and McLean and even Hardwick Elliott made more and more pressing demands upon his time, until finally he insisted that he could no longer play shamelessly the invalid. He must look in upon the works up river if only for the moral effect which it would have upon the men. She assented grudgingly. It would be but a day or two, and then—then he would come back to her.

The next morning, at the moment when Barbara and Steve were mounting their horses, for she wanted to ride with him a little way, Dexter Allison chose to disclose something which had been but lately in the process of preparation. He joined them at the edge of the lawn before the white columned house on the hill.

"Easing back into harness, I understand," he began, not quite comfortably, however, for he was aware of a gleam of disapproval in his daughter's eyes at this interruption. "Well, there's no great rush, but it's wise no doubt to see that things don't lag." He hesitated and shifted heavily to the other foot. "We'll want to start through to the border by fall, I suppose."

"This is the last time," he told her in a voice vibrant and low. "This is the last time—for you and me." He held her closer for a moment. "You will be ready when I come back?"

She bobbed her head. "Ready—and waiting," she said.

The next night, in the cabin up river, after Miriam had left them alone to what she termed their complacent silence, Garry Devereau and Steve sat a long while before the former raised a face alight with his rare mirth.

"Well, here we are," chuckled Garry. "I, poor, but honest, already in the toils of matrimony, and you, a plutocrat in sudden danger of a government investigation, I'm told, and hovering on the brink?"

"Here we are!" echoed Steve. And that was as close as either of them came to outspoken emotion. With a lightness somewhat self-conscious, Garry had alluded to the property which Caleb Hunter had turned over to Steve. There was a trace of like humor in the latter's reply.

"I certainly am oppressed with the cares of sudden wealth," said he. Only her father and Miss Sarah and Caleb were present when they were married. And then, and not alone because she knew he wished it, but because it was the dearest wish of her own heart, they turned their faces toward the cabin on the balsam knoll.

He dismounted and lifted her to the ground, for suddenly she wanted to go the rest of the way on foot. She let her weight lie against him, the top of her head scarce higher than his chin, and sighed a little.

"Tired?" he asked with that gentleness he saved for her alone. The bright head shook. "Happy?" he asked again as gently. She swung around and clung to him then.

"I'm so happy," she whispered. "Do you suppose that any one will ever be as happy again?" There was ineffable content in her question. Whimsically her own phrase rose to his lips.

"Maybe," he said, "maybe some time—in books." She lifted her face then. He had the lanky glory of her eyes.

"Maybe," she echoed, her voice tremulous—"some time—but this time in real life too."

THE END. Money in Eggs. Eggs are not bankable but the money from their sale is. This money is yours for the effort. How do you treat the hen that lays the Golden Eggs? Dr. B. A. Thomas' Poultry Remedy will keep the poultry in good condition and increase the yield in eggs. We guarantee this and refund your money if not satisfied.

COUNTY COURT OF CASS COUNTY, NEBRASKA. In re estates of Ezekiel W. Kennedy, Alameda, Kansas, deceased, and Alameda, Kansas, deceased.

Order for Hearing. Now on this 18th day of November, A. D. 1916, comes Charles E. Kennedy and files his petition in this court alleging that Ezekiel W. Kennedy, a resident and inhabitant of Plattsmouth, Cass County, Nebraska, died intestate on the 24th day of January, 1905, seized of the real estate of said deceased, and the value of said real estate, and that said deceased left issue, his wife, Alameda, and only three children, namely, L. E. Kennedy, Fred, and Charles H. Kennedy, all now of legal age, and that no application has ever been made by her, or by any of said children, or elsewhere, for the appointment of an administrator of said estate, and that more than three years have elapsed since the death of said Ezekiel W. Kennedy, and that on the 15th day of September, 1916, the said Charles E. Kennedy, the petitioner, was duly appointed administrator of the above described real estate of Alameda Kennedy, who died intestate, seized in her sole and separate right, and left surviving her only heirs at law the three children above named, which said children upon the death of their mother, the said Alameda Kennedy, became vested with the entire ownership of said above described premises; that the said Charles E. Kennedy, the petitioner, is wholly exempt from attachment, execution or other mesne process, and is not liable for the payment of the debts of said decedents, or either of them.

He prays the court for an order fixing time and place for a hearing upon said petition; that the regular administration of said estates, and each of them, may be proceeded with, and for findings of facts upon the allegations in said petition contained, and for a decree of heirship. (ORDER)

Whereupon it is ordered and adjudged that an order be set down for hearing on the 20th day of December, A. D. 1916, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. at the County Court room in the City of Plattsmouth, Cass County, Nebraska, and that all persons interested in said estates, or either of them, be notified of such hearing by publication of this order for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing in the Plattsmouth Journal, a legal newspaper published in said County and State, and that if they fail to appear and contest said estate, the Court may enter a decree as asked. By the court, ALLEN J. BEESON, Judge of County Court of Cass County, Nebraska. GERALD M. DREW, Attorney for Petitioner, 1021 W. O. W. Bldg., Omaha.

LEGAL NOTICE. The State of Nebraska, ss. In the County Court, ss. In the matter of the estate of James W. Thomas, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Julia Thomas, praying that an order of administration of said estate may be granted to Jacob Hoffman as administrator. Ordered, that on the 15th day of December, 1916, at 10 o'clock a. m., is assigned for hearing said petition, when all persons interested in said estate, or either of them, may appear at a county court to be held in and for said county, and show cause why the prayer of said petition should not be granted; and that notice of the pendency of said petition and the hearing thereon be given to all persons interested in said matter by publishing a copy of this order in the Plattsmouth Journal, a weekly newspaper printed in said county, for three successive weeks, prior to said day of hearing.
