K. C. PASSENGER TRAINS ROUTED THROUGH HERE

The Burlington has been sending their passenger trains from all points on the main line and the K. C. route through this city today owing to the fact that the Union Pacific bridge between Omaha and Council Bluffs is being replaced today by the new bridge and the structure will not be ready for travel for at least several hours after the moving starts. The Burlington is fortunate in having a bridge over the Missouri river at this point as it allows them practically to push their trains through on time. All the trains on the K. C. line as well as No. 3 are sent through over the Plattsmouth bridge while the night trains are being handled by the Union Pacific that hopes to be able to have the new bridge in and ready for service inside of one day, if their plans carry out as expected.

ANOTHER COLD MORNING.

The temperature this morning was still of the right variety and at the Burlington station at 7 o'clock 5 below zero was registered, which was one degree colder than on Wednesday and now holds the record for the coldest weather of the season, and the state of Nebraska was the coldest yesterday of any state in the Union, but the indications point to a moderation of the weather. Several of the residents of the city report it as cold as 10 and 12 below last night, but they doubtless took their own personal opinion rather than that of the mercury for the basis of their conclusions.

You will find a large line of the Dennison seals and cards for those Christmas packages at the Journal office.
