LYMAN H. HOWE'S TRAVELLOGUES BETTER THAN EVER

In an even better and bigger way Lyman H. Howe's camera men have developed new possibilities of reproducing bizarre and beautiful phases of life in foreign climes as well as our own for the engagement at the Parmele theatre on Thursday, October 11. Of foreign scenes, one will take "Howe travelers" to the cascades, gorges and medievale ruins of southern France, which are reproduced in nature's own glorious hues and tints, and to view the majestic grandeur of the Alps while watching the perils faced by daring mountain climbers when scaling precipitous cliffs. Dangers lurk below them in the untrod abysses as well as above them from avalanches of thousands of tons of snow and ice crashing down. Then approaching closer to the events of today, they are piloted to "Somewhere in the Atlantic" to form a new and fresh acquaintance with life aboard Uncle Sam's floating fortresses, alert and armed for momentous action; also the U. S. Naval academy, at Annapolis, to see how midshipmen are trained to become officers of the fleet; to the real wild west to witness thrilling contests in broncho-breaking by the most expert cowboys and cowgirls; to the lumbering industry in Maine; and take a ride over the Cascade mountains in Washington. Interspersed with the sedate subjects, a legion of entirely new animated cartoons will romp and ramble gaily, enlivening the entire program by their merry antics.
