A letter of recent date from Mrs. J. J. Jamieson, of Porterville, Calif., to Mrs. George Curvey, of this place, states the circumstances under which Mr. Jamieson met death on December 20th, 1917. He was hauling orange boxes out of his orange grove with a team of mules that became frightened and ran a short distance throwing him out and from the appearances at the scene of the accident, dragging him some little distance. He was found under the wagon with the lines wrapped about his neck, badly bruised and unconscious. There were no witnesses to the accident which occurred about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and he had the last load of boxes for the day. Doctors were on the scene by the time Mrs. Jamieson and neighbors had reached him and gotten him out from underneath the wagon, but they had no hopes for him. He was then taken immediately to the Porterville hospital, where he lay unconscious for five hours, passing away quietly about nine o'clock in the evening. The two children, Dee Jamieson and Max Jamieson, who live near and their wives, and Mrs. Jamieson, were all at the bedside when the end came. Max and his wife and little son "Baby" John, will make their home with his widowed mother. Mr. and Mrs. Jamieson, were former residents of Alvo, having been in business here some years ago and left many friends who deeply sympathize with the bereaved family in their hour of grief.
