Main Headquarters of U. S. Army Now in France

A City of Central France, Thursday, Jan. 10.—Although the influx of hundreds of staff officers belonging to the lines of communication branches of the American army has not yet begun and although their transfer from Paris here is supposed to be a deep secret, this beautiful little city in central France is already aware that it will soon be host to the newest allies.

American flags are already waving from many buildings and the citizens are preparing what promises to be a most enthusiastic welcome to the new comers.

The preparations for the advent of the Americans, numbering several hundred officers and twice as many assistants, clerks, civilians and military workers, are almost completed; so that when the men begin to arrive in a day or two, each one will find comfortable quarters arranged for him either in some one of the half dozen good hotels or in private houses that have been rented by the advance agents.

Advantages of Location. They will find themselves quartered "for the duration of the war" in one of France's healthiest and most beautiful cities, where cleanliness apparently has been made a cardinal virtue, where food, especially fresh vegetables in season, and dairy products are plentiful, where the water supply offers none of the drawbacks, that must be contended with close behind the front and from which they can operate fully as advantageously as from Paris.

All available hotel rooms have been engaged and private houses have been rented until the end of the war. Rooms also have been engaged in private homes for additional officers who may come here. The big clerical force will be distributed in part among the families of the city and in part will be housed in huge barracks in the outskirts of the city.

Food Supply. One of the first moves will be to install a "sales commissary" at which foodstuffs brought from America will be sold at less than the local market prices, if possible, so that the presence of the Americans will not have the effect of forcing up prices to the distress of the inhabitants.

A medical officer, who has made an exhaustive examination, finds the water even better than in Paris, sanitation excellent and the houses clean and everything modern to a surprising degree. Arrangements have already been completed whereby the American forces can draw from the French all necessary fuel; thus there will be no suffering from what at this time is unusually cold weather. The American officers have found the mayor and other city officials ready for cooperation in the fullest degree. The quarters in the main have been secured by the mayor, who asked the citizens to show their patriotism by giving up a portion of their houses to their American allies. The Red Cross and the Young Men's Christian association have already established branches here.
