THE COUNTRY TEACHER.

An immigrant girl can come to Kansas City and earn more money, net, as a servant, have more for recreation and save more than is earned by any grade teacher in the public schools.

The wages of unskilled servants have jumped from $4 and $5 a week to $7 and $10 a week. Dry goods stores have increased the wages of women clerks from a fourth to a third since 1912.

The wage of a school teacher remains at the level of peace times. After spending years in special training and study, she starts work at $500.

These are some of the startling facts presented by the school teachers of this city, whose demand for a higher wage has behind it even more potent reasons than these of comparison with other occupations.

These teachers direct the mind and thought of the coming generation. Upon them is placed a heavier responsibility for patriotism and sacrifice for steadfast loyalty and undiminished passion for liberty and the institutions of liberty than any other unit of society.

Yet they are kept at an earning power that is under, rather than above, a living wage.

This community must recognize its responsibility promptly. It must recognize that the buying power of a dollar has decreased under war conditions. It must recognize that the teacher who steps from normal school or college to begin her career at $500 at year can buy only the things that $285 would have purchased five years ago—and lofty wages were never an incentive that drew its recruits for this service from the best of womanhood.

Were there no higher and better reason for giving justice to the teachers of this city than the mere thought of self protection, a lesson might be read from conditions in Germany today, where the teachers at the beginning of the war were the most potent aids of the military kultur, and neglected as are our teachers, are now the most ardent advocates of the spirit of revolt. Prussianism has been starved from their souls.

Let it not be said that America starves loyalty and patriotism from those who train and teach the hope for the future.—Kansas City Post.

ARE YOU AN AMERICAN CITIZEN?

From Monday's Daily.
Many are now asking themselves the question, am I an American citizen? and will be only too well pleased to be able to answer yes. But they have neglected the opportunity which has been open to them during the years. One of our old friends, an excellent resident, who has made his abiding place here for nearly fifty years, and over forty years ago, made application for the first papers, and securing them, has not thought about perfecting his citizenship. Now comes the proposition, facing him, after he has thought himself a citizen, you will have to register as an alien enemy, to the land which has made you and you have helped to make. But the opportunity was yours and you neglected to improve it. When the war is settled all who have neglected to perfect their citizenship will do so, and that without any delay.
