AMERICANS IN FRANCE EVENTUALLY TO FORM SEPARATE DIVISIONS

London, June 27.—Intervening in the debate on the new military service act and speaking of the urgency of obtaining men for a serious emergency, Premier Lloyd George said today it was true the Americans were being brigaded with the allies, but that it was with the distinct understanding that when men were obtained they should replace the Americans and enable the Americans to form their own divisions.

That was the honorable understanding upon which President Wilson was prepared to send a very large force to France, the premier continued, hence it was imperative "that we make a most drastic comb-out in order to maintain our

AS IT IS VIEWED IN ENGLAND.

From Saturday's Daily.

The following clippings which we are indebted to John McLean, of the firm of Avard & McLean, for it is from the over-seas Edition of the London Daily Mail:

England As The American "Blighty." It is good news to learn that the wounded Americans are coming to England. It is proof positive that they feel "at home" with us. An American mother's boy may be dead or badly wounded weeks before the news reaches her. She has more suspense because of the great distance she is away—perhaps 6,000 miles—and if the son goes home at all he goes injured, may be maimed for life. But it will be a great consolation to American mothers to know that while their sons are on this side the Atlantic England will be, as it were, a second home to them.

This should be a consolation to those who have friends in France, who are in the service, and should there be such a thing as they may be wounded it is known that they will have the care which can be given in the land where the fight is for the life of civilization.

Here is another clipping coming from the same source:
