BURLINGTON SHOP GIRLS ARE LOYAL

ALL GIRLS WITH THE BURLINGTON PURCHASE BONDS, AND HELP WIN THE WAR.

From Monday's Daily. It is a natural thing to say the boys of the Burlington shops, and truly so for they are a good loyal bunch, and can always be depended upon, when anything is to be put over. The way they have subscribed for the bonds is a sure conclusion of this fact. Now the Burlington shop girls, are here with the coin to, for they have all subscribed for bonds, and in liberal quantities. The fact of the girls being 100 per cent is very gratifying, not alone to them but to all concerned. The employees of the shops are all doing their part to win the war and we are going to. There is a tendency to be a little easy on bonds in some directions on account of our success at arms in the battle arena, but remember that now is the time for all to stand together in this matter, while the victory is in sight, put forth every effort, in man power, and every cent which can be spared, for just now they both will do the most possible.

Nothing more was heard from the matter until last evening about nine o'clock, when as John Wagener was going to Louisville from his home a few miles southwest of that place, and as he was passing near the church a few miles southwest of that place, and a man with a rifle, holding it high with both hands, commanded the car to stop. Mr. Wagener did not do so but give the car a little more gas, and away he sped. A report of the gun showed that the man had fired a shot whether at him or not. Mr. Wagener did not know until he had arrived at Louisville, when he found that he had hit his gas tank, which was on the rear of the car. The sheriff was notified and with policeman Manner of this city went to Louisville and the vicinity making a thorough search, but to no avail. Efforts are still making for the capture of the supposed holdup.
