THE MAN AT THE WHEEL.

Republican newspapers and politicians throughout the country are harping on the possibility of President Wilson getting the nation involved in a diplomatic tangle with Germany that would estrange us doesn't recognized it. from our allies.

These critics lay much stress on the fact that Germany's peace overtures have all been addressed to President Wilson and none of them Is the influenza more powerful to the nations with which we are associated in war.

THE SPECTRE OF DESPAIR.

Despair broods over Germany today. With it many other spectres canifest themselves to the panic viion of a people horridly awakened from their dream of sin and pride. The ghost of Edith Cavell ("with Aate by her side") ranges through the fand with the dank, dishevelled babies of the Lusitania and the gore stained martyrs of Aerschott. No wonder the average German burger and hausfrau shudder as the past and future clash together in their ers will weight the facts in the case reading of President Wilson's reply to their prayer for peace.

OF PRESIDENT WILSON'S

WAR POLICIES

Record of Congressman Reavis ·1 Voted against President Wilson

on the McLemore Resolutions to warn citizens to keep off armed merchant ships. Wilson was sustained by Congress by a vote of 276 to 142. Cong. Rec. 64th Cong. 1st Session, page

2. Voted against President Wilson on the bill to create shipping board. Bill carried 209 to 161. Cong. Rec. 64th Cong. 1st Session, page 8374. 3. Voted against the President on the Cooper Embargo Amendment. Cong. Rec. 64th Cong. Second Session, page 4691. 4. Voted against President Wilson on the bill to provide revenue, expenses for army, navy and fortifica-tions. H. R. 20573. Bill carried 213 to 196. Cong. Rec. 64th Cong. 2nd Session 2441-2.

5. Voted against President Wilson on "Declaration of War Against Germany." In opposing declaration of war, Reavis, after stating that he could not adequately "catalogue his opposition" in the time allotted to him, said: "The sky has been gray without all the day; the rain has fallen drearily, monotonously, as though the heavens wept at the contemplated action of the Republic." Cong. Rec. Vol. 55, part 1, page 357.

6. Did not vote on Declaration of revenue for war expenses. H. J. Res. 195, Cong. Rec. 65th Cong. Second Session, page 546.

7. Voted against President Wilson on bill permitting the directors of National Banks in their discretion to contribute profits available for dividends to the Red Cross. Bill carried 194 to 70. Cong. Rec. 65th Cong. 2nd Session, page 7349.

MR. VOTER, WHO DO YOU EN-DORSE? WILSON OR REAVIS?

GROSS DECEPTION

War Record of Congressman Reavis Distorted

By means of circulars and newspaper advertisements, none of which however, does he stand sponsor for or sign, the democratic candidate for congress is seeking support by willful misrepresentation and misstatements regarding the war record of Congressman Reavis.

Every statement which follows may be verified by the Congressional Record, which is on file in every county seat library in the district.

1. Mr. Reavis did not oppose the President in his opposition to the McLemore resolution, but on the contrary spoke on the floor of Congress against the resolution. The McLemore resolution was not a war measure but was disposed of not only long before we entered the war but long before the congressional election of two years ago. Mr. Reavis's speech against it was circulated in this district long before the congressional election of two

2. The shipping bill was not a war measure but was passed in May, 1916, almost a year before we entered the war and Mr. Reavis's vote was to make the shipping board a non-partisan body instead of a partisan body.

3. The Cooper amendment was not an embargo amendment, but was designed to prevent the arming of munition ships. Mr. Reavis not only voted demand that our ships be armed. This speech was delivered on February 17th, 1917, about two weeks before the President came to congress and asked for legislation permitting him to arm ships.

4. The fortifications bill was acted upon in the 64th Congress, which convened in December, 1915, but the inference is willfully left by the Democratic candidate that it was a war measure in a war that we did not enter until

5. In his speech against the war with Germany Mr. Reavis used the language quoted, but he further said, "if we pass this resolution this war becomes our war and no patriotic congressman will deny his country the men and money necessary to prosecute the war to a successful and speedy termination." While many who voted for war have since voted against measures to prosecute the war Mr. Reavis has supported every measure to raise men and money since war was declared. A man's courage should not be determined by his eagerness to get into a fight. A safer test is to wait and see how he fights after he gets in.

6. Any statement that Mr. Reavis was either not present when any revenue bill was passed or that he voted against it is utterly false,

7. Mr. Reavis did vote against the bill to permit bank directors to contribute the profits of the bank to the Red Cross. A number of New York bankers came to Washington to secure legislation permitting them to make this contribution to the Red Cross by giving whatever of the banks' profits they desired to that organization. Many stockholders of banks are poor people who are dependent on the income they get from the bank for their support. One widow wrote to Congressman Reavis that the sole support of herself and five children was the five hundred dollars a year she got from the bank stock left her by her husband. This bill would have permitted the bankers to give away the sole support of this family and to take credit to the bank for the contribution and the widow be given no credit at all. Mr. Reavis believed that if the bankers wanted to be generous they should be generous with their own money. He believed it dangerous to make it lawful for anyone to give away the money of another.

Mr. Reavis is familiar with the legislative condition as it pertains to the war. He spent eight weeks on the battle front in France and knows the needs of the country and our boys over there. He is a member of the great judiciary committee which has had charge of a large part of the war

His opponent has given to the voters of the district no evidence of his ability save the ability to misrepresent.

In this hour of the country's crisis which do we need, experience or an experiment?
