St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The backward glance over England and America unprepared fo war notes some similar figures in either country. For ten year Lord Roberts preached preparation against a foe who scarcely disguised his hostility; yet the people would not hear. When the war broke they all turned to their iron soldier, and Kitchener undertool his gigantic task, carried it out through good and evil report, and then disappeared like a shooting

Much of the same devil of numbness afflicted England and the United States—the partial atrophy wrought by selfishness and pacifish upon "the soul of a nation," as the phrase goes. But with the prick of the German sword on English ter ritory, with the Zeppelin raids came the rousing, and the mar shalling of an army. American authority, likewise gaining the ability to see through a millstone with a hole in it, spurred mainly by the urgency of extra-governmental minds, at last trod down the pacifists and pro-Germans, and stumbled haltingly to the erectness of manhood.

If after backing him up in his Mittleuropa dream, after encouraging him in pursuing it with every excess of ruthlessness and after cheering him and adulating his aims down to the very last moment of seeming promise-if then the people of Germany should extradite him and shoot him or chop his head off it is not impossible that something like sympathy might be felt for him

If the deposed Emperor is to be returned to Germany, it should be on the distinct understanding that he will be surrendered immediately to the Allies as titular head of the surrendered German armies. They will find a way of disposing of him so as to prevent trouble making on his part and at the same time they will avoid the folly of making martyr of him. It is not easy t see how the Dutch could turn him over to the Allies without loss of self respect. They can send him back to his own country however.
